PARIS, Jan. 16.—The following statement was given out at the Polish National Committee headquarters here tonight:

"Negotiations between M. Paderewski, representing the Polish nation, and General Pilsudski have resulted in the establishment of a basis of agreement. Upon this basis a reconstruction of the Cabinet is expected soon, with M. Paderewski at the head of the new Ministry. The terms of the compromise include a definite agreement upon delegates to the Peace Conference."

M. Demoski, President of the Polish nation and former Polish leader in the Russian Duma, has been decided upon as delegate by both sides, it was announced.

ALLIED MISSION TO LEMBERG

Will Arrange Armistice Terms Between Poles and Ukrainians.

WARSAW, Jan. 16, (Associated Press.)—Colonel Grove of the American Mission in Poland left Warsaw today for Lemberg, where the situation is reported to be considerably improved.

Colonel Grove was accompanied by British and French officers, and they will arrange armistice terms which are expected to permit the release of Polish troops in that region for transfer northward to oppose the Bolshevist tide from Russia.

BATTLE FOR VOTES HOT IN GERMANY

German, are nearly all found in the ranks of the reactionary parties, the captains of industry and the junkers forming the largest number. To ally themselves with these elements will cost the Christian People's Party still more popularity and votes, which the Socialists and Democrats will divide.

In Bavaria the Christian People's Party is still heading the list, with over 1,000,000 votes and 58 mandates, which are insufficient to form a Government. A cabinet will probably be formed by the Socialists, with more than 900,000 votes and 51 mandates, allied with the Democrats, having 22 mandates, and the Peasants' League, having 17. The latter, being largely composed of soldiers returned from the war, are mainly responsible for reducing the Centrist mandates.

Kurt Eisner, the Independent Socialist leader, failed completely. The national election result probably will not differ much from this.

Solf Making Campaign Tour.

The former Foreign Secretary, Dr. Solf, the German Democratic Party's champion, is winning many votes in Westphalia and the Rhineland, where he is stump speaking. At Bielefeld yesterday the Socialists interfered in his favor against the Independents, who sought to break up a meeting, and compelled them to leave the hall.

Solf said that the Democrats stood for a federal republic, with a President elected by the people, and invested with large executive powers. For the present, he said, the coalition Cabinet formed by the Social Democrats was the only practical Government. The Socialists, he believed, would prove to be sufficiently conservative when responsible for the Government.

Certain industries were socialistic, he continued, because they would thus create new values for the public and the State. The separation of Church and State might be considered, but the decision should be left to the National Convention. Religious feelings must be respected. With all his might he would always work for a League of Nations, with Germany on equal terms with all others.

Solf said that he still counted on the return of part of the German colonies, basing his hopes on President Wilson's program. He condemned Kurt Eisner's revelations concerning the origin of the war as absolutely undignified, asserting that the question was too complicated to single out one nation as responsible.

Predict Radical Setback.

BERLIN, Jan. 15, (Associated Press.)—With the elections to the National Assembly less than four days off, the bourgeois parties are bending every effort to rally both male and female voters in a gigantic protest against Bolshevism.

It is now considered highly doubtful if the Radicals jointly poll more than 45 per cent. of the total vote, with the chances that it may be considerably less. The bourgeois German Democratic Party, according to the estimates, is likely to poll 15 per cent. of the vote and possibly more. The Clericals and Conservatives are being allowed 30 per cent. In the figuring while the former National Liberals may secure a scanty 10 per cent.

The women of Berlin are carrying on an active campaign. They are keenly alive to the issues involved an appear to be taking to their new franchise privilege with a spirit of understanding. Their votes will probably be cast in an overwhelming preponderence in favor of the Socialist and bourgeois Democratic tickets.

The Government is making extensive preparations to protect the polling booths while the voting is going on next Sunday. Outside of Berlin the only disturbances are expected to be in Posen, where the Poles are in authority, according to the official view here.

It is not expected that it will be possible to get any definite idea of the result of the balloting before the middle of next week, because of the badly interrupted telegraphic and railway communication.

The Communistic Party, which is the polite name for the Spartacide Bolshevik, is not officially taking any part in the election.

Warn Americans to Hold Aloof.

COBLENZ, Jan. 17, (Associated Press.)—The officers and men of the American Army of Occupation have been prohibited from taking any part in the elections to select delegates to the new German National Assembly, which will be held Jan. 19, and for the Prussian National Assembly, which will be held Jan. 20, and from expressing preference for or against any German political principle, candidate, or party.

By order of Major Gen. Joseph T. Dickman, commander of the Army of Occupation, responsibility has been placed upon the German officials to see that the elections are conducted without fraud or intimidation of any kind. A notice published by the army officials for the benefit of civilians throughout the occupied zone says:

"The proper German officials shall take such steps as are necessary to secure a full, free, and fair expression of the will of the voters of Germany, in order that the constitution about to be written and the Government now about to be established may be founded upon the immovable foundation of the will of the people."

The women are particularly active in political affairs, holding meetings daily at Coblenz, Treves, and other towns. Throughout the Rhineland, according to reports received by the Army of Occupation, every effort is being made to conduct an orderly election and "one that will reflect credit on the people by the election of candidates pledged to the conservation and reconstruction of stable government."

There has been no disorder at any of the political meetings, which in Coblenz alone average about sixteen each day.

DISPUTED DISPATCH ALLOWED TO COME

Tribune Message, Denied by Wilson, Was Temporarily Withheld by Clemenceau.

PARIS, Jan. 17.—Premier Clemenceau in the Chamber of Deputies today gave a warning against false reports concerning the Peace Conference, citing as an instance a cablegram addressed to The New York Tribune:

"I saw yesterday a cablegram addressed to The New York Tribune," he said, "in which it was said that President Wilson has threatened to withdraw all his troops and himself retire if certain stipulations of his were not granted. When I showed this telegram to Mr. Wilson this morning he replied to me: 'What an abominable falsehood!'"

With regard to the foregoing dispatch this statement was issued by The New York Tribune last night:

"At 11:30 A. M. Friday, Jan. 17, The New York Tribune issued a statement denying that it had ever received from Paris or had ever printed in its columns a statement remotely resembling that which was referred to by Premier Clemenceau in the Chamber of Deputies. At 2:20 P. M. there was received in The Tribune office what appears to be the message in question. Owing to the fact that it has been made the basis of controversy The Tribune prints it just as the correspondent sent it, without exercising editorial judgment upon the text. The message follows:

PARIS, Jan. 16.—Among the many sensational rumors habitually afloat in the Chamber of Deputies there has been one to the effect that President Wilson has threatened to withdraw American troops from Europe if certain of his ideas are not followed by the Peace Conference. How far these things have gone in the three conferences already held it is impossible for me to say, but that the Chamber's report is pretty nearly correct there is no doubt.

There are numerous indications of this recent attitude on Wilson's part, and that he is now tacitly but definitely, if not actually, threatening other commissioners. He has come here to make a certain kind of peace and intends to do so, his supporters say. And his supporters have frankly said that he will refuse to sign any peace not in accord with what he considers a fair and equitable interpretation of the armistice agreement which accepted his fourteen points with reservations only as to the freedom of the seas.

Now, his supporters say, some of the Allies are unwilling to abide by the armistice terms and will seek at each renewal to go beyond the armistice terms and impose further penalties on the Germans, who accepted the armistice in good faith.

Mr. Wilson's supporters feel furthermore that some of the Allies—not including Great Britain—desire to prolong the armistice in order to penalize Germany to the utmost before concluding a peace with her.

"There is nothing on the face of the message to show when it was filed by The Tribune correspondent in Paris, but there is evidence to show that it was not held longer than forty minutes by the cable company on this side. Therefore, the delay was in Paris, which indicates that there is still in existence an effective press censorship. This was known already in every newspaper office, because correspondents had been complaining about it, but no one had made a point of publishing the fact.

"It will be noticed that The Tribune correspondent does not make of his own authority the statement which the President, according to Premier Clemenceau, could characterize as an 'abominable falsehood.' He merely asserts that there was such a rumor afloat in the Chamber of Deputies.

"Apparently, this is one of those circumstances under which a correspondent would feel justified in making a statement of fact about the existence of a rumor without assuming any responsibility for the rumor itself."

FRENCH DENY CENSORSHIP.

Temps Resents Intimation That News Is Interfered With.

PARIS, Jan. 17.—The semi-official Temps, reverting to the question of publicity of the proceedings of the Peace Conference, says the French censor is exercising no control over news destined for the allied or associated countries.

"Certain dispatches sent from Paris to American newspapers," it remarks, "insinuate that the French Government exercises control over all news relative to the conference, and over all means of communication with other countries. These allegations are erroneous. Censorship is not exercised over news destined for the allied or associated countries. The French press can render a service to the common cause by denouncing to our friends across the Atlantic the malevolent rumors by which it is attempted to alter the truth."

460 LOST WITH SHIP WHICH STRIKES MINE

The Chaouia Sunk in Straits of Messina—Many of 230 Survivors Injured.

ROME, Jan. 17.—When the French steamer Chaouia struck a mine in the Straits of Messina 460 of the 690 passengers and crew on board were lost. The steamer was on its way from the Piraeus to Constantinople, and sank in four minutes.

Many of the 230 survivors were injured by the explosion and were removed to hospitals in Messina. The Chaouia was formerly the steamer Koningen Wilhelmina.

Two Americans were aboard the Chaouia, but their identity has not been ascertained.

The Chaouia was a vessel of 4,334 gross tons, built in 1896.

UNITY OF COMMAND IN SIBERIA ARRANGED

French General Janin to Have Supreme Direction of Allied Campaign Against Reds.

OMSK, Siberia, Jan. 16, (Associated Press.)—Unity of command on the Siberian front has been arranged, and the French General Jules Janin, who has been commander of the Czecho-slovak Army, will have supreme direction of the allied forces in Russia.

The appointment of General Janin is hailed as augurring the ultimate defeat of the Bolsheviki.

General Knox, chief of the British military mission and also in charge of the commissariat, is occupied in the task of selecting a representative commission to study and formulate a plan for the election of a National Assembly.

The newspapers call attention to the fact that the workmen's co-operative organizations of Omsk and elsewhere have proclaimed their support of the new Government. The Government is actively negotiating with the powers for recognition and also for participation in the Peace Conference.

MOSCOW STARVING NOW.

WARSAW, Jan. 15, (Associated Press.)—The rigors of Winter setting in at Moscow are said to have reduced the city to the same condition as Petrograd, with the streets littered with cats, dogs, and horses dead from starvation.

The lack of coal has compelled the closing of the public baths, while meals cost 50 rubles each at those restaurants which are still able to remain open, according to the latest refugees arriving here.

Soup kitchens have been established, and the Red Army is the only group receiving sufficient to eat.

The refugees say that the Bolsheviki are endeavoring to aggrandize their régime by the erection of memorial arches similar to those in Paris and Rome.

QUESTION DICKINSON, AGENT OF VIERECK

Senators Hear Letters Assailing Wilson, Tumulty, Lansing, and Others.

TOLD NAVY 'SECRET ORDERS'

Writer Asserted They Were Against Teutons—Explains "Leak" of Peace Note.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—There was read today into the records of the Senate committee which is investigating German propaganda a large number of letters written by J. J. Dickinson, until Nov. 13 last a Captain in the army, to George Sylvester Viereck of New York, who during the period of American neutrality was one of the most active German propagandists in this country.

Most of these letters, according to the Army Intelligence Service, were really intended for Dr. Karl A. Fuehr, one of the propaganda chiefs sent to this country by the German Foreign Office. The Military Intelligence Service further alleges that the letters as a result were promptly transmitted by wireless to Berlin. The letters were all signed "Josiah Wingate," which Dickinson admitted was a nom de plume.

In his testimony before the letters were produced by Major E. Lowry Humes, Dickinson swore that at no time did he have reason to believe that he was employed by agents of the German Government. Until Bernstorff was ordered out of the country he had no inkling that Fuehr was one of the important cogs in the German propaganda machine. He said he worked simply as a Washington correspondent of Viereck's weekly, The Fatherland, and subsequently for the Transocean News Service, the German semi-official news organization, of which Dr. Fuehr was directing head in this country.

Dickinson was on the stand several hours. It never dawned upon him, he swore, until just before this country entered the war, that he had been "duped." After we entered the war, he said, he did all he could to help the Government build up a case against Viereck. Referring to the so-called "peace note leak" of January, 1917, he said he was led to believe that he was in a way responsible.

He said he "doped out" the situation correctly, and gave his deductions to John F. Harris of Harris, Winthrop & Co., Wall Street, New York. He also added that Bernard Baruch, who, he said, made $300,000 on steel common as a result of his (Mr. Baruch's) foresight, had figured the situation out as he himself had done.

Dickinson said that in the controversy that followed the "leak" he went to Chairman Henry of the House Committee on Rules and told him what he knew of the matter. He also communicated, he said, with Secretary Tumulty.

Various letters read into evidence were written in 1916. Dickinson admitted the authorship of all except one, which purported to report an interview with President Wilson at Shadow Lawn in October, 1916. Major Humes said that only a part of the letters were put into records.

First Letter to Viereck.

The first letter from Dickinson to Viereck which was read into the record, dated June 4, 1916, bore a reference to Captain Guy Gaunt, then Naval Attaché of the British Embassy at Washington. In part it read:

"National Press Club,
"Washington, D. C., June 4, 1916.
"My Dear Mr. Viereck:

"Please note by the above that I am now receiving my mail at the National Press Club instead of the Army and Navy Club, as heretofore, the reason being that I find it more convenient to use the first-named club in doing my work than the latter.

"I learned yesterday from an authoritative source that the President has been informed that Secretary Lansing's attitude toward every newspaper man in Washington, who exhibits by his questions when calling at the State Department even a sense of fairness toward German interests, is growing more insulting every day. It is particularly marked in the case of the representatives, whether foreign or domestic, of the German-language press.

"Wilson, I know, is in a near-panic over the coming campaign. His desperation is perceptibly growing daily. This frame of mind may lead him to almost any outburst against Lansing or other Cabinet officers who may fall under just criticism because of their unneutral attitude toward Germany. I had a long talk, somewhat startlingly frank, this morning with a Cabinet officer on this whole subject.

"In spite of denials from the White House recently of friction between Lansing and Wilson, I would not be at all surprised if Lansing would leave the Cabinet, possibly because of 'failing health,' within a few weeks. The Republican campaign managers are raking his Mexican relations and activities, past and present, with a fine-tooth comb. This the President knows, too. I confidently expect to have photographic copies of certain of his financial transactions with the Huerta Government at the City of Mexico within a couple of weeks. At any rate, I have been faithfully promised this by responsible Mexican representatives.

"Exposure of the Britisher."

"I have been expecting to receive from you the promised resolutions on the Captain Gaunt affair. I have spoken to several members of Congress about the matter, men who have read with interest your exposure of the Britisher and who hope that the subject matter may be so presented in resolutions that they can handle them in some form in Congress.

"Schrader was with me several hours yesterday and doubtless will discuss with you several very interesting points I gave him for his next letter.

"I was not here when Bryan was last in Washington, but I have learned from two or three of his intimates who talked with him that he will give the Wilson cause only the most perfunctory support in the campaign. This will also mark the course of Speaker Clark. I do not know whether I told you in one of my last letters the story related by Mrs. Bryan to T. H. Pickford, a local Democratic magnate, of the immediate cause of her husband's precipitate retirement from the Cabinet. It was that Tumulty told a prominent German-American that Bryan was the sole cause of the Administration's anti-German policy. Pickford went to Tumulty with the story, and the atmosphere of the White House was blue with curses of the Bryans all the time Pickford was there. Pickford has since written to Mrs. Bryan a full account of his interview with Tumulty.

"This matter could be so worked up as to force Wilson to rid himself of Tumulty. What suggestions have you to make as to its handling? I believe it is too big an opportunity to be neglected. Mrs. Bryan possibly would be willing to come out in an open statement. She is a very able and a very determined woman. She loathes the whole Wilson outfit and especially Tumulty, the tumultous. Faithfully yours,

"JOSIAH WINGATE."

On Eve of Convention.

Three days later, on June 7, Dickinson wrote that the Administration would "remain excessively quiet on everything of domestic or international concern," until after the result of the Republican National Convention in Chicago was known.

The next letter, dated June 8, 1916, contained an invitation to Viereck to come to Washington and meet Burleson, Tumulty, and Daniels. The letter indicated that the President would not receive the visitor, but "Wingate" could introduce him to Tumulty, who would report everything he said to the President. He also touched on the punitive expedition into Mexico under Pershing in this letter.

In a letter of June 9, 1916, which also referred in the main to the impending Presidential campaign, Dickinson reported that he had talked with Secretary Tumulty, who "manifested an unusually keen concern, asking me if I thought you would support the President or the Republican nominee at Chicago if he were other than Roosevelt." Dickinson said he had been unable to answer so pointed a question, and added that he had also been unable to answer when Tumulty asked him whether or not you would direct the Fatherland (the pro-German weekly of which Viereck was editor) along a neutral course in the campaign." Continuing, Dickinson wrote:

"This only demonstrates how anxious the Administration people are growing over the question of the attitude of the German-American element in the forthcoming campaign. When I told Tumulty that you probably might make a visit to Washington shortly and that I should want to have him meet you and two or three others at luncheon, he was silent for a moment and said that it might be embarrassing all around, should he be seen with you. I ridiculed this strange declaration, and he finally said without explanation that you certainly ought to meet and talk with Burleson when you come here. However, I dare say that all he meant was that he would take the subject up with the President and be governed wholly by his chief's instructions."

In Doubt Over President.

In a letter of June 11, Dickinson wrote that he was still without information as to what the President would write into the Democratic platform "on this subject," his reference apparently being to the "Americanism" question.

"He, (the President)," the letter continued, "is naming the officers of his convention, is writing its platform, will man the National Committee through Tumulty and his son-in-law, McAdoo, and will run his own committee. What Bryan thinks of all this or intends to do about it I do not know now. I wrote Mrs. Bryan a letter today in the hope of obtaining some expression from her that might reflect her husband's mind."

In this same letter, Dickinson prophesied that the Morgans would finance the Wilson campaign through Cleveland H. Dodge. He said that the politicians believed that the Standard Oil and Cowdray Oil interests would back Hughes.

On June 14, 1916, Viereck was informed by letter that "by order of the President the War Department is preparing advertisements for 3,000 army trucks, in addition to 2,000 already to be bid for at the Depot Quartermaster's headquarters in New York on June 30.

"This is," he observed, "one of the most positive signs observable of Wilson's purpose to do something sensational before the Presidential campaign closes."

On June 18, 1916, in a letter to Viereck, Dickinson wrote:

"* * * if you want to meet any of the folks here in high and responsible place I will attend to this end of the negotiations with pleasure. I would suggest that Untermyer, whom I know very well, be approached on the subject at once. I have no doubt at all that he would promptly and gladly respond. Fred Lynch told me recently that he had met you at Untermyer's Yonkers place several weeks or months ago. Samuel is a shrewd citizen and knows how to do things."

Suspected a Wilson "Scheme."

In a letter of June 23 Dickinson made reference to what he termed was "further evidence of my conviction of a shrewdly devised scheme to tie us to the body of a corpse—England," adding that this was propaganda "started by the Wilson forces to place the blame for the extremely embarrassing situation in Mexico upon Germany."

"Let us do something to reveal this whole damnable business and do it quickly," he added. "I am willing and anxious to serve in this cause in any capacity to which I may be assigned."

Under date of July 20, Dickinson wrote in part:

"Nothing of the same relative importance has occurred since the opening of the war in Europe as the U-boat inquiry at Baltimore promises. If the Deutschland shall be captured or destroyed by a vessel of the allied powore the fault will be ours.

"Our navy has been secretly instructed to work against the interests of the Central Powers. A considerable element of the navy, whom I happen to know personally, is opposed to discrimination between the nations; but most of the element is favorably inclined toward the Teutonic element.

"If we can arrange to get together the various elements which in detail may be opposed to the British program, but which may indorse our general program, without admitting that they do so, I am confident that we may accomplish something worth while."

Dickinson wrote on Aug. 29 that he knew that "the Administration is anxious to catch Germany in a trap on the submarine question, and that we shall probably hear a great deal on this question before the votes are cast in November." In this letter he also made reference to a conference the President had the previous day with the railroad executives.

Wilson's "Cunning and Craft."

"Before he called these men of affairs into the conference," he wrote, "the President had prepared his statement, and he gave it to the newspapers through Secretary Tumulty while the conference was in session. In other words the President 'put one over' on the railroad executives and caught them napping. * * * This incident savors so of Wilson's cunning and craft that I think it could be used as a good text for an article in The Fatherland."

Under date of Aug. 23, 1916, "Wingate" wrote to Viereck:

"Here is a narrative that would be almost unbelievable if it were not for the fact that so many strange things have attended the Wilson foreign policies—not to say have influenced them. I obtained it recently from two Democratic members of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations:

"When the President was recently hard pressed by them to let them know what he was up to in Mexico—whether or not he intended eventually to intervene—he should be re-elected—he told them that that eventuality would depend almost wholly on the conditions in Europe. He pointed out to them that he had announced a policy of broad and far-reaching neighborliness with all Latin America in his able speech two years ago, when he declared that never again, or at least so long as he was the responsible head of the Government, would the United States take a single foot of territory by conquest. * * *

"Now, said the President to my two friends at different times—I mean they were not with him at the same time—our word on this point has gone forth to the whole world, and it is doing us good in Latin America. Therefore, should we be forced to intervene in Mexico, which would mean war, we could not in plain honor take a foot of Mexican territory as indemnity after we had overrun and conquered the country. We could only demand and levy a money indemnity.

"More than 50 per cent. of the productive wealth of Mexico, Wilson pointed out from statistics which he held in hand, was owned by foreigners, largely Americans, the next in holdings being the English and French. The levying of a money indemnity, therefore, would wring from 'our friends' the bulk of the extra taxation imposed through which to pay the indemnity. That would place a burden upon corporations in this country which own mines, ranches, &c., which it would be bad domestic politics to impose. It would also cause irritation in England and France.

"The Morgan-Guggenheim group are the largest owners of productive wealth in Mexico. Next to them comes the Lord Cowdray outfit in England.

"Need I tell any more of this remarkable story to enlighten you on the Wilson Mexican policy?"

Disavows Shadow Lawn Letter.

The so-called Shadow Lawn letter, the authorship of which Dickinson denied, advancing the theory that it had been written by Viereck, was the last of the documents read into the record. It read in part as follows:

"Oct. 24, 1916.

"My Dear Mr. Viereck:

"At Shadow Lawn last Saturday the President initiated a conversation with me about you, which at least I regard as curious if not significant and of importance to you.

"He started the conversation by asking me how long I had known you personally and how well I knew you. I told him that while our personal acquaintance intercourse had extended over only two months, still I thought I knew you pretty well, mainly because I had for several years been very intimately associated with a German of your general type—the late Count Seckendorff—who temperamentally was a great deal like yourself, in that he was a man of punctilious honor and hence with strong inclinations always to be fair.

"Then the President asked me if I thought you were judicial-minded. I facetiously replied that you were a poet and that I had never known a poet of judicial mind.

"He then inquired with very apparent interest about what he called your 'equipment.' I dwelt upon your culture in a broad literary sense.

"While he was discussing your 'apparent' sense of fairness I related to him briefly the gandsis of your statement for the press. I told him that you had in the original statement this assertion, 'an ounce of performance is better than a pound of promise,' and that you had added this without any request or hint from me. This obviously pleased him very much.

"I infer—and my inference may be wide of the mark—that he has determined to appoint some sort of neutrality board after the election to aid him in reaching some new judgment in regard to our international relations in order that he may act within the new lights which may be thrown upon the subject.

"I was strongly tempted, of course, to ask him what he had in mind, but you can understand the sense of delicacy I felt when that thought was evolved in my mind.

Attitude of Hyphenates.

"On the general subject of the hyphenates he seemed wholly at ease. He said he believed a year ago that their blood had been so heated against him that they were violently against him en masse. He added, however, he was convinced that their blood had cooled and that only their exclamatory leaders were in the main the only element that persistently took an unfair view of his conduct.

"He had on his desk while talking to me about you, a full copy of the statement you had prepared for the press in re the Ridder statement concerning Stone and Burleson. He remarked upon the fairness of its tone as illustrated by your assertion that you did not regard his Americanism as inferior to that of Hughes. Before I left him he looked around and said that he was sorry no stenographer had been present while he was talking to me so that what I had said concerning you might have been taken down.

"I remarked again that I was sorry he had replied at all to 'that crazy man O'Leary' and he said that he had not dictated that statement in haste or heat, but that it was the result of very cool and careful thought on his part.

"I had almost forgotten to tell you that during the conversation the President said in effect that he wanted to know about you and others, who like yourself have individualized themselves in these troublesome times, because you might be useful when settlement time comes."

Dickinson, in a statement to the committee, said he had served as a Major in Cuba in 1898 and had been commissioned soon after this country entered the European war as a Captain in the National Army. He said that his resignation became effective on Nov. 15 last.

The result of the investigation of his record was placed in evidence by Major Humes. In this report, signed by Brig. Gen. Marlborough Churchill of the Military Intelligence Service, General Churchill recommended that Dickinson be discharged from the service by the President. His resignation followed and was accepted by President Wilson. Dickinson read into the record a letter which vouched for his loyalty and which was signed by Major Gen. Frank McIntyre of the General Staff.

J. M. Kennedy of Montana followed Dickinson on the stand. His testimony had to do with brewery and German activities in Montana. Both of these interests, he said, had been very active.

BRITISH HAD 90-MILE GUN.

Giant Weapon Was Made to Bombard Rhine Towns.

LONDON, Jan. 17.—A big gun, which was expected to be of even greater power than "Big Berths," was among the secret productions of the Sheffield Cannon Works, it became known today. This gun, which it is said was to have been used to bombard Rhine towns, was about eighty-three feet long, and its weight, presumably when mounted, is given as 124 tons.

It was stated officially today that the monster cannon would carry to a distance of fifty miles, but the men working on it were of the opinion that it probably would be destructive at ninety miles. As far as could be judged by a layman, the gun was made by inserting an extra tube into a fifteen-inch longrange naval gun's barrel, thus doubling the thickness of the barrel to carry a shell of about eight inches instead of fifteen. The end of the war came before the gun could be put into action.

the legal arguments of the "wets" and will tell the ministers how to avoid such efforts of the liquor men to nullify the operation of prohibition laws as he has encountered in the past. Others speakers will be William H. Anderson, Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, and Congressman J. Y. Sanders, who will talk on "Prohibition and the Boys in the Trenches."

Commenting on the rapidity with which the amendment was ratified, once the State Legislatures started voting for it, the Rev. Dr. Rollin O. Everhart, editor of The American Issue, declared that to those who had understood the change in the psychology of the nation during the last few years the result seemed inevitable.

On behalf of the local brewers it was said yesterday that the industry had made no plans for converting its plants to other uses. Unlike the distilleries, which can be more or less readily converted into places for the manufacture of commercial alcohol and other industrial distillates, it was explained, the breweries find no other line of endeavor open to them without practically re-equipping the plants.

EUROPE'S EYES ON 'DRY' MOVE.

London Paper Thinks It May Affect England's Policy.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 17.—The Daily Chronicle says:

"America's decision that the whole United States shall go 'dry' is indeed a portend for us all. In the wine growing countries of the Continent, the new policy will probably be received with something like incredulity. In Great Britain, on the other hand, it cannot but be sympathetically and anxiously watched, and all parties will realize that in the long run its success or failure will decide not only the American policy on this subject but the Anglo-Saxon."

TWO MORE RATIFICATIONS.

Minnesota and Wisconsin Legislatures Approve Dry Amendment.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Jan. 17.—Minnesota ratified the Federal prohibition amendment today when the House adopted the joint resolution. The Senate acted yesterday.

MADISON, Wis., Jan. 17.—The Legislature of Wisconsin today completed ratification of the national prohibition amendment. The vote in the House was 58 to 39.

The Senate ratified the amendment last Wednesday.

Forty of the forty-eight States have now ratified the amendment.

TAFT POINTS TO CUBA AS PEACE EXAMPLE

Finds League of Nations Vital for Peace and Creation of New Republics.

ALL WILL NEED PROTECTION

League Would Cause Extension of the Monroe Doctrine to the Entire World.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—William H. Taft, in an address tonight before the National Geographic Society, supported President Wilson's contention that the creation of a League of Nations is not only vital to the future peace of the world, but also essential to the creation of a half-dozen new republics.

Mr. Taft declared that the experience of the United States in Cuba should teach us how uncertain is the fate of a new republic, unless it has a protector which can aid it to stand upon its feet. "Such a protector," declared Mr. Taft, "the League of Nations must be to the to-be-created States of the Ukraine, of the Baltic provinces of Old Russia, of Finland, of Poland, including Russian, Austrian, and German Poland, and of Czechoslovakia."

Instead of endangering the Monroe Doctrine, Mr. Taft declared that the League of Nations would be merely an extension of this doctrine to the entire world. "Instead of impairing it," said Mr. Taft, "it would strengthen the Monroe Doctrine, because in case of its violation the obligations of the league would require all the great powers to unite in the maintenance of it."

Mr. Taft asserted that the projected new States of the Ukraine, of the Baltic provinces, Finland, Poland, and Czechoslovakia would hem Germany in, preventing Germany from extending herself into Russia and also thwarting her ambitions for the control of Middle Europe to Bagdad and the Persian Gulf.

"In addition to these States," added Mr. Taft, "the Jugoslavs are created into an independent republic, Palestine is to be set up as an independent State, and so, too, Armenia and the Caucasus."

Following the expression of his belief in the establishment of the State of Palestine, Mr. Taft voiced a personal view of far-reaching significance with regard to the extension of the colonial empires of any of the allied nations. The German colonies, he said, must not be given to Great Britain or to any other of the great powers, but must be internationalized and placed under the control and administration of the League of Nations itself.

"It will not be satisfactory to all the Allies," said the former President, "to turn either the German colonies or Constantinople over to one Government. Germany has forfeited her right to the colonies by her mistreatment of them in the past. She has been as murderous in dealing with the backward tribes as she was in Belgium and Northern France.

"Were we to turn her colonies over to Great Britain or France there would at once arise a suspicion that the trustee was exploiting the colonies for the benefit of its home people. The acquisition of these lands by any one or another Government would give the appearance of selfishness to the aims of the Allies in the war.

"What is true of the German colonies is also true of Constantinople. It must be internationalized."

The former President characterized as "a bugaboo which ought not to attract the support of serious men" the suggestion that by entering the League of Nations the United States would be parting with its sovereignty as a nation."

STRAUSS TO ADVISE MISSION

Federal Reserve Vice Governor and T. W. Lamont to Go to Paris.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—Secretary Glass announced that with the approval of the President, Albert Strauss and Thomas W. Lamont would soon leave for Europe for the Treasury in an advisory capacity in connection with the armistice discussions and other financial questions arising at the Peace Conference.

Mr. Strauss has received leave of absence from the Federal Reserve Board, of which he is Vice Governor, to enable him to undertake these duties.

When Thomas W. Lamont of J. P. Morgan & Co. was informed of Secretary Glass's announcement he said:

"I can, of course, add nothing to Secretary Glass's announcement except to say that I am happy to be able to serve the Government in any way possible."

PACKERS' PROFITS INCREASED BY WAR

Aggregate for the "Big Five" $95,000,000 in 1917, Against $18,000,000 in 1912.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—Food Administration regulations neither regulated profits of the meat packers nor benefited the public or the consumers, Stuart Chase, an expert accountant, employed by the Federal Trade Commission, told the Senate Agriculture Committee today in presenting figures to show that profits of the five big packing concerns doubled and trebled during the war.

Mr. Chase, who was testifying at hearings on the Kendrick bill, providing for Government supervision of the meat industry, said that no one knew accurately what the packers' earnings were because their methods of bookkeeping had the effect of covering up their profits. He asserted, however, that examinations by the commission of the books of the Armour, Morris, Swift, Wilson, and Cudahy Companies showed their aggregate profits in 1912 were $18,715,000, and in 1917 $95,639,000.

Based on capital stock, Mr. Chase said Morris & Co.'s profits in 1917 were 267.7 per cent. and that on the same basis Armour & Co.'s profits in 1916 were 114.2 per cent. Because of a later increase in capital stock the percentage for Armour & Co. dropped to 27.1 in 1917. Swift & Co.'s profits in 1917 on the same basis were 63 per cent., while those of the Cudahy Company in 1917 were 23.2 per cent., based on capital stock and surplus. Wilson & Co.'s earnings for the same year were 29.6 per cent. on the capital and surplus.

HENEY ASSAILS PACKERS.

Declares They Illegally Fixed Prices for Army Equipment.

Francis J. Heney, chief counsel for the Federal Trade Commission in its investigation of the meat packers, repeated the charges he made before the Senate Agricultural Committee last week at a meeting in Cooper Union last night. Unless the Government undertakes the regulation of the packing industry, he asserted, the packing monopoly will spread until a multitude of businesses have been drawn into the web.

"The packers have a death grip on the clothing industry now in addition to the food monopoly. Their tentacles are reaching far and wide. Wool and hides have come so into their grasp that they can dictate the price of leather, and soon will dictate the prices of other commodities. They fixed the prices for saddlery and harness sold to the army in an unlawful combination. Kaiserism in industry in this country is coming at a very rapid rate, and these economic evils cannot be cured by criminal prosecutions.

Mr. Heney said he was in favor of Government ownership of public utilities, and he strongly advocated legislation for the regulation of the meat industry. The packers, he said, had recently tried to interfere with the Government's investigation in many ways.

DAWSON MAKES CHANGES.

Columbia Five Strengthened for Game with St. John's.

The Columbia basket ball team will meet St. John's tonight on the Morningside Heights gymnasium floor. It will be a slightly changed Columbia lineup. Fred Dawson has effected several shifts which he believes give the team more scoring power.

Johnson, who was a forward, has been shifted to centre. Farrell has been moved from his guard position to Johnson's old place, while Kiendl will fill the berth vacated by Farrell.

Candidates for a freshman five were called out yesterday and reported for practice to Carl Merner. Merner will spend part of his time with the freshman players and will develop a team for games with nearby high schools.

WANTS FRANCE PROTECTED

punch. They will get away with all that. Go to it."

The American attack succeeded, the Marshal continued, "and here we are on the Rhine."

The armistice was not concluded too soon, and the Allies got all they asked for from Germany without continuing the fighting. The Allies, the Marshal said, were prepared for another offensive stroke, which would have forced the Germans to give up. This was to have been made in Lorraine on Nov. 14 with six American and twenty French divisions.

Our Soldiers "Superb."

"This is for me a happy opportunity," Marshal Foch began, "to tell you all the good things I think of the American Army and of the part it played on our side. Your soldiers were superb. They came to us young, enthusiastic, and carried forward by a vigorous idealism, and they marched to battle with admirable gallantry.

"Yes, they were superb. There is no other word. When they appeared our armies were, as you know, fatigued by three years of relentless struggle and the mantle of war lay heavily upon them. We were magnificently comforted by the virility of your Americans.

"The youth of the United States brought a renewal of the hope that hastened victory. Not only was this moral fact of the highest importance, but you also brought enormous material aid and the wealth which you placed at our disposal contributed to the final success. Nobody among us will ever forget what America did.

"And you know what happened on the field of battle since the month of July; first on the Marne, then in the region of Verdun. General Pershing wished as far as possible to have his army concentrated in an American sector. The Argonne and the heights of the Meuse were a sector hard to tackle. There were considerable obstacles there.

"'All right,' I said to him. 'Your men have the devil's own punch. They will get away with all that. Go to it.'

"And finally everything went well; everything went so well that here we are on the Rhine."

Germans Faced Disaster.

Marshal Foch was asked by the correspondent:

"But was not the armistice concluded too soon?"

"It was not possible to do otherwise," answered the Marshal, "because the Germans gave us everything that we asked for at once. They satisfied all of our conditions. It was difficult to ask more.

"Doubtless any General would have preferred to have continued the struggle and to have battle when the battle which offered itself was so promising, but a father of a family could not help but think of the blood that would be shed. A victory, however easy, costs the lives of men. We held victory in our grasp without any further sacrifice. We took it as it came.

"The German high command was not ignorant of the fact that it faced a colossal disaster. When it surrendered everything was prepared for an offensive in which it would infallibly have succumbed. On the 14th we were to attack in Lorraine with twenty French divisions and six American divisions. This attack would have been supported by other movements in Flanders and in the centre.

"The Germans were lost. They capitulated. There is the whole story.

"And now we must make a peace which will correspond with the magnitude of our victory. We must have a peace as absolute as was our success and which will guard us against all future aggressions.

"France has a right to effective measures of protection after the formidable efforts she put forth to save civilization. The natural frontier which will protect civilization is the Rhine.

Must Hold Germans on Rhine.

"It is on the Rhine that we must hold the Germans. It is by using the Rhine that we must make it impossible for them to recommence the coup of 1914. The Rhine is the common barrier of all the Allies, precisely of all those who united to save civilization. The Rhine is the guarantee of peace for all the nations who have shed their blood in the cause of liberty. Then let us watch on the Rhine.

"We have no idea of attacking Germany or of recommencing the war. Democracies such as ours never attack. They ask but to live in peace and to grow in peace, but who can say that Germany—where democratic ideas are so recent and perhaps very superficial—will not quickly recover from its defeat.

"England has the Channel to cross. America is far away. France must always be in a position to safeguard the general interests of mankind. Those interests are at stake on the Rhine. It is there that we must prepare to guard against the painful surprises of the future.

"The armistice is signed, but peace is not yet concluded. So long as the status of Europe has not been settled, let us watch, let us watch together, so that we lose not the fruits of our common victory. Let us remain united as we were in battle."

CALLS PRINCE FOR TRIAL.

Budapest Prefect Sends Summons to Windischgraetz.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

GENEVA, Jan. 17.—The police prefect of Budapest has summoned Prince Windischgraetz, whose intrigues in Switzerland in favor of former Emperor Charles are well known, to return at once to Hungary for trial.

According to Budapest papers the former director of the Hungarian potate monopoly, Eugene Mikles, has admitted having handed over to Windischgraetz the sum of $830,000 for which no account was rendered.

Letters from the Prince to Mikles have been discovered in which the Prince inquires "When are you going to send me the tobacco?" tobacco being a slang Hungarian expression for money, which in this case is peculiarly appropriate because Mikles sent the money to Windischgraetz in four sealed cigar boxes, each containing over $200,000. Windischgraetz has been using these funds for the Austrian monarchist propaganda in Switzerland.

Former Emperor Charles is seriously ill with influenza and unable to leave his bed. On Jan. 1 he attempted to rise, but fainted immediately. Since then he has stayed in his bed, which on fine days is moved to an open window for a few hours.

His entourage denies reports that his condition is really due to habits of intoxication and that he is continually under the influence of liquor.

Rush for British War Bonds.

LONDON, Jan. 17, (British Wireless Service.)—The rush which began Monday to obtain war bonds before they are withdrawn has increased daily. The banks have been deluged with applications and the Post Offices have been besieged by small investors, anxious to follow the lead given them by big financial and commercial houses. The Treasury hopes that the final total tomorrow, the last day for applications, will reach £1,600,000,000.

TO RAISE $16,000,000 FOR B. R. T. PURPOSES

Minimum Amount of Certificates Which Receiver Garrison Plans to Issue.

ALL NOT NEEDED AT ONCE

Shonts, in Letter to Civic Bodies, Compares Municipal and Private Ownership.

Lindley M. Garrison, receiver for the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, announced yesterday that it would require from $16,000,000 to $17,000,000 to finance the three companies of which he is the receiver—the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, the New York Municipal Railway Corporation, and the New York Consolidated Railroad Company. This money will have to be borrowed on receiver's certificates, and as soon as Mr. Garrison determines the exact amount he will need he will apply to Judge Mayer, in the United States District Court, for a hearing. The application probably will be made on a Monday.

In his application Mr. Garrison will suggest to the court to what extent the lien on the properties which will secure the certificates of the receiver should have a prior claim over the outstanding securities of the companies. Not all of the money asked for by Mr. Garrison will be needed at once.

Mr. Garrison received a letter yesterday from James E. West, Chief Scout Executive of the Boy Scouts of America, suggesting that the receiver "organize a small citizens' committee among those who use each of the various divisions of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit lines in receivership, to serve without pay compensation as advisers to you with reference to improvement in the service on the various lines."

Mr. West said that he was convinced that "men and women of ability would gladly enter into the spirit of such a scheme and render you valuable service, not primarily to increase the dividends of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, but to give the public better service, and this course would mean increased dividends in the long run. Certainly it would serve as a clearing house for the consideration of the merits of various complaints and suggestions which will be made to you."

Mr. Garrison wrote to Mr. West immediately accepting the suggestion, but in somewhat different form from that in which it was made. In his letter Mr. Garrison said:

> I do not think it would be desirable for me to organize the citizens' committee of which you speak, but I would be very glad if such a committee should be organized. I am extremely desirous of rendering the very best service with the facilities under my control, and I recognize the benefit of sensible and well-meaning advice from every source, and I have no doubt that such a committee as you speak of would be of great use to me in the proper execution of my duties. May I venture to suggest that you set about organizing a committee for that purpose, and I assure you that I will work in the fullest co-operation with you and with such committee.

Mr. West uses the Sea Beach line in journeying from his home to his office in the Fifth Avenue Building, and in his letter he volunteered to serve on an advisory committee of the patrons of that line.

Theodore P. Shonts, President of the Interborough, yesterday addressed a letter to various civic and commercial organizations, in which he said that, when the Board of Estimate, in its report of a week ago Friday, denying an increase of fares, said that "there appears to be no reason why the burdens caused by the war or otherwise ought to be shifted from the holders of Interborough securities to the traveling public," the board "did nothing less than make a frank announcement of a policy of confiscation."

Mr. Shonts asserted that, in the traction controversy, no question of economics or law was involved, but only the question of public policy. Then, after asking the question, "Does the public want the subways and elevated operated by the city?" in parallel columns he indicated as follows what in his opinion would happen under municipal operation and under private operation.

UNDER CITY OPERATION.	UNDER PRIVATE OPERATION
Increase of fares to meet costs due to war after having violated the spirit of the agreement with the Interborough and after destroying its credit and by that act shutting off all future investment of private capital necessary for development of the city's transportation.	Increase of fares to (1) meet costs due to war, and (2) to permit current payment of preferential due Interborough, and (3) to make the city's investment self-supporting and thereby avoid increase in taxes otherwise necessary to meet interest on city's investment.
Operating officials subject to political change every four years or oftener.	Tenure of position dependent upon demonstrated and maintained efficiency.
Governing policies subject to political expedy decisions to hold until those exigencies change.	Governing policies determined jointly by company and public authorities; decisions to hold so long as they are beneficial.
Political incentives to govern employes.	Efficiency incentives to govern employes.
Low discipline and morale, with high accident rate.	High discipline and morale, with low accident rate.

The letter from Mr. Shonts concluded as follows:

> Inasmuch as the question at issue is not the profit of the company, that being limited by the terms of the contract, the only immediate practical question is whether the city should, at no loss to itself, protect the credit of its partner over the period of abnormal prices due to war and until normal conditions are restored.
> The President of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury, and other Government officials have publicly asked local authorities to adopt such a policy. Some 400 other communities, including several in New York State, have already done so. They have considered it unwise public policy to cripple their vital utilities. But the present city Government told that all these 400 communities have been false to their trust in refusing to act the Shylock in demanding what was "nominated in the bond"?

Roosevelts Return to City.

OYSTER BAY, L. I., Jan. 17.—Messages of condolence from all parts of the country have been accumulating at the Roosevelt home on Sagamore Hill in the absence of the late Colonel's widow and son, Captain Archibald Roosevelt. It was announced today that the family would reply to all the messages where the names and addresses of the senders were known. Mrs. Roosevelt, Captain Archibald, and Mrs. Richard Derby returned to New York City today after having spent a week with Mrs. Roosevelt's sister-in-law, Mrs. W. S. Cowles, at Farmington, Conn. They will remain in the city a few days.

ENGINEERS ENTER PROTEST.

Criticise Estimate Board for Curtailing Transit Appropriations.

At a meeting on Tuesday afternoon of the Engineering Council, representing 36,000 members of national engineering societies, the action of the Board of Estimate in so curtailing the appropriation of the Public Service Commission as to necessitate the dismissal of more than 300 engineers was severely criticised. Invitations to attend the meeting were accepted by representatives of the Public Service Commission, the engineering societies, the Merchants' Association, and the Committee of Allied Trades, but invitations sent to the Board of Estimate and to the Mayor and Controller brought no response.

Statements were made at the meeting that the city was losing $1,000,000 a year in interest and other millions of income through delays in rapid transit work; that $60,000,000 spent for subways and more millions for equipment were lying useless for lack of engineers to forward the work and that damage claims by contractors because of delay may easily aggregate $6,000,000.

SINN FEIN EXPECTS SUPPRESSION MOVE

Rumor in Ireland That British Government May Apply the Crimes Act.

AGITATORS LOOK TO WILSON

Two Home Rule Elements Eager for President to Interest Himself in Their Cause.

DUBLIN, Jan. 17. (Associated Press.)—The Government, it is reported here, is about to issue a proclamation tightening the laws against the Sinn Feiners. Some months ago a proclamation was issued under the Crimes act, declaring that the Sinn Feiners were dangerous. This was the necessary preliminary step to the suppression of the organization, but no subsequent step has yet been taken.

Once a proclamation suppressing the Sinn Fein is issued, it becomes a crime to belong to the organization, and the Government can prosecute any member and send him to jail. Imprisonment does not affect the Sinn Feiners unless it prevents their having their own way. They cause trouble in the prisons, and at the present time there is virtually a state of seige in the Mountjoy Prison in Dublin because one Sinn Feiner there is not treated as a political prisoner.

The Sinn Fein intends to summon its own Parliament, and has already held two preliminary meetings. They treat the last election as an act of self-determination and look upon all persons elected, regardless of party, as members of the Irish Republic Assembly. Accordingly, they have issued invitations to their own members, as well as the Carsonites and Nationalists, but no one of the other party members is taking any notice of it.

Thirty-four of the Sinn Feiners elected are imprisoned in England and Ireland, while Patrick MacCarten, Liam Mellowes, and Diarmuid Lynch are in the United States. This situation has delayed the calling of the National Assembly.

When the assembly is called, the question is whether the Government will ignore it or suppress it. Two influences are operating on the judgment of the Lord Lieutenant, Viscount French, who is the real ruler. One side declares that the Sinn Feiners have an impractical policy and will wear themselves out if let alone, while if they are harassed they will retain the support of the country. Viscount French is said to lean to the former view. It is said that he is a Home Ruler, but will insist on obedience to the law.

Look to Wilson for Help.

The Sinn Feiners intend that if the National Assembly meets to nominate Professor de Valera, Arthur Griffiths, and Count Plunkett as delegates to the Peace Conference. They will claim representation as if Ireland were a separate State, like Belgium or Serbia. They do not expect that their claim will be granted, but are doing all they can to induce President Wilson to raise the Irish question.

The Sinn Feiners are not the only Irishmen who look to President Wilson for aid. Another group is a section of moderate opinion under Captain Gwynne, a former member of Parliament, who has a scheme for home rule along federal lines. This plan involves a parliament for all affairs, other than imperial, common to Ireland, and three or four provincial parliaments with full power, including taxation, over their own local business. This scheme would give Ulster protection without putting it in a privileged position.

It is believed that Ireland would accept this or a similar plan if it came from a neutral tribunal instead of from the British Parliament. If President Wilson should become interested in such a plan, it is argued by its supporters, the Government would be relieved of a difficulty and the President would get credit from Irish-Americans for finding a way out of a critical situation. They declare that the Sinn Feiners, although they probably will still protest against a link with England, would either have to accept this plan or be deserted by their supporters.

If some such settlement is not reached, it is believed that there will be the usual disorder and imprisonments. Ireland, some hold, will probably reply to imprisonments by more disorders. There is said to be a good deal of ammunition and explosives in the hands of wilder spirits. Meanwhile, there is comparative calm in Ireland. The leading Sinn Feiners in their speeches ask for time to carry out their policies and deprecate impatience.

Denies Dublin Rumors.

LONDON, Jan. 17.—The British Government is not expected to interfere with meetings of the Sinn Fein Parliament as long as it keeps to the bounds permitted to debating societies and only passes its resolutions, says a Dublin dispatch to The Mail. If it exceeds these limits, however, the dispatch adds, and does anything interfering with liberty or the rights of individuals, the Government will be compelled to take action.

A number of revolvers and several hundred rounds of ammunition belonging to Sinn Feiners have been seized, according to The Mail. Two arrests have been made.

ACTRESS ALLEGES FRAUD.

Says She and Ten Others Were Misled as to Argentina Engagement.

Miss Hedvig Brosseit, an actress, who played at one time with Maude Adams in "Peter Pan," returned to New York yesterday from Argentina on the Swedish steamship Sagua. She asserted that she and ten other American actresses had been sent there under contracts to appear in supposedly reputable theatres. In Buenos Aires they were sent to sing at the Casino, where the audience was composed entirely of men. She said she intended to bring the matter before the Federal authorities to see if she could not have the theatrical agent who booked her punished.

some of us to prepare and present to him a document consisting entirely of statements about the war quoted from Mr. Hearst's own papers. I do not see how he can wish to retain Mr. Hearst on his committee.

"We Americans are a tolerant people, and it is well that we are. But tolerance can be carried too far, and we cannot assent to the presence on the official Committee of Welcome to Our Soldiers of a man who defended Germany when she sank the Lusitania, (you will find that in The New York American of June 6, 1915,) who was in close association with Bolo and von Bernstorff, who did his utmost to create prejudice against our Allies, and is still doing this, and who did all that he could to keep our country from entering into the war with Germany.

"Every intelligent man or woman in New York knows that Mr. Hearst did these things. Mayor Hylan knows this, I am sure, as well as any of us. I hope, therefore, that our Mayor may be willing to correct his mistake.

"If the Mayor is not willing to do this, then New York will continue to stand shamed before this country, but we will not be parties to it. We will do our best to show that New York wishes to stand by the work of this Independent Citizens' Committee.'"

President Hibben's Speech.

Dr. John Grier Hibben said in opening the meeting:

"By our presence here tonight we wish to express the insistent demand that there must be an American welcome to our American soldiers and sailors. We propose to form an independent committee of citizens, free from any Teutonic taint, men who have never given, directly or indirectly, comfort or aid to the enemy; men whose patriotism has not been due to the pressure of public opinion from without, but to a kindling fire of loyal devotion within; men who believed from the beginning that it was the imperative duty of our country to go to the help of the allies in their desperate struggle to save the world.

"I would assure the soldiers and sailors before me in this great audience, and all of their comrades whom they represent, that we look upon you with a feeling not only of pride and of gratitude, but of affectionate reverence as well. You have gone down into the very gates of hell for us. Your wounded and disabled are daily witnesses on our streets of the terrible suffering and sacrifice which you have gladly made for us. And your heroic dead upon the field of honor have sealed forever with their blood the holy heritage of our liberty.

"The welcome which this city and nation shall extend to such men must be in the hands of citizens whose names and records through the war have been without reproach and without suspicion. When this committee was first suggested the name which was in the minds of every one as its Honorary Chairman was that of Theodore Roosevelt, the one who above all others awakened the conscience of the American people to their duty in this war and saved our country from the purchase of peace at the cost of her honor. The invitation to act as Chairman of this committee was presented to Colonel Roosevelt on the day preceding his death.

"He sent a telegram accepting this position, and adding that he would be at call for active service in the Spring. Let the spirit of Roosevelt rule this meeting tonight and direct the purposes and activities of your Citizens' Committee so that our homecoming troops may feel, in the welcome they receive, the presence of one who is dead and yet lives, who rests from his labors, but his works do follow him."

Cadman Assails "Apostles of Hate."

The Rev. Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, another of the speakers at the meeting, did not mention the name of Mr. Hearst, but when he spoke of men who had apologized for German atrocities, cries of protest arose from scattered groups which had cheered for Mr. Hearst. Dr. Cadman said:

"It would be treason to the millions who have entered into rest to permit the apostles of hate, prejudice, and dissension to overcome their unity, which was born, not of the will of statesmen, but of consecrated flesh and blood held in battle and of the will of God. We are not blind to the sinister fact that efforts are being made by perverse and misleading publicists and journalists to dissolve the concord our President and Lloyd George and Clemenceau are endeavoring to establish on a sound and intelligent basis. Even the devotion of our defenders is being capitalized for the political and commercial advantage of those who played the Kaiser's game to the limit of their personal safety.

"They encouraged the common antagonist, they caricatured his opponents, they lied about our allies, they sought to clasp the hand still wet with the blood of massacre, and bade him be of good cheer. No evasion, no subterfuge, no misrepresentation, no duplicity that brains fertile in these products could bring to bear was neglected. Now that the hour of reckoning and award has dawned, these men have the unspeakable effrontery to push themselves forward and turn about with an ease born of custom that they may profess to be what they never were.

"As Americans, as citizens of the new world in which we want our warrior men to have a distinguished part, we repudiate these individuals. In doing so, we act for the nation which loathes their treacherous ways, for if a referendum vote were to be taken throughout the land on which Committee of Welcome should officiate in New York City to greet in this port of entry the sons of every State of the Union, an overwhelming majority would decide for the committee in session here. As New Yorkers, and as Americans, we bid you welcome with an affectionate ardor unstained by deceit, and pledge ourselves to your future welfare."

The Rev. Dr. Nehemiah Boynton said that the returning soldiers might not know on landing who had acted the part of patriots during the war and who had not, but he said they would soon find out.

"The soldier knows the difference," he declared, "between a 50 per cent. loyalty, or a 75 per cent. loyalty, and a 100 per cent. loyalty. You give him a chance to find himself, now that he has got home, and we will have no trouble at all with those individuals who here and there among us assume to be patriots, but who are really pygmies in loyalty to their country."

James M. Beck, former Assistant Attorney General, after an eloquent speech in praise of the American achievements on the battlefields, said the present was a time of internal peril for this country.

"We have had some evidence tonight of the lawless spirit in this City of New York, the spirit that would defy and destroy free speech, the spirit that would substitute for the reign of law the voice of the mob; and there is no city in which such a spirit can be invoked by men of evil passions with such danger as this great City of New York. We must for our own protection combat the evil tendencies that are already at work.

"I do not propose to exaggerate or place an undue emphasis upon a group of hired men that tried to break up this meeting. They are but bubbles floating on the surface.

"I, for my part, came only with the intention of welcoming these American boys, and I was shocked to see the deliberate and concerted attempt to defeat our efforts to extend the right hand of fellowship to the boys who have covered this Empire State of ours with immortal glory."

Men said to be Hearst employes and agents were in all parts of the Garden. Outside of the meeting were a number of men passing cards urging soldiers, sailors, and marines to attend the meeting and vote in favor of a resolution to send American soldiers home immediately and give them six months' extra pay; proposals which have been urged recently by the Hearst papers. An attempt was made to read this resolution from the floor, but the speaker's voice was drowned and he finally took his seat.

When the meeting was about half over Dr. Hibben called for all supporters of William Randolph Hearst who had been disturbing the meeting to leave. About 100 persons left the hall, half of them being soldiers or sailors. Then "The Star-Spangled Banner" was sung.

As the crowd was filing out of one of the Madison Square entrances after the meeting, one Hearst enthusiast started an argument in which, according to bystanders, he defended the publisher's editorial stand at the time the liner was sunk. Several men and women took exception to his remarks, and a lively colloquy ensued. A young woman dressed in a yeowoman's uniform joined in the argument by crying, "Somebody stop him. Don't let him talk that way."

No one made any attempt to stop him. He continued to argue in a heated tone with the bystanders. Suddenly the young woman jumped forward, seized the man by the neck, and began to pummel him in the face.

"I lost a brother in the war and I can't stand such talk from you," she cried as she seized him.

Those near by rescued the man, who was escorted out by several ushers before two men who had jumped in to assist the yeowoman had a chance to attack him.

Make Protest to Hylan.

Accompanied by several employes of William Randolph Hearst, sixteen sailors and nine soldiers rode up to the home of Mayor Hylan in Brooklyn at 12:30 o'clock this morning. The Mayor came out of his house to meet them. The Mayor was informed that the men in uniform were there to protest on the ground that they had been ordered out of the Madison Square Garden meeting, and on the further ground that, although they had asked for the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner," the band had responded with "God Save the King." Mayor Hylan made a brief reply, in which he said that it appeared to him that the meeting was held for the purpose of attacking and harming a single individual.

Some of the men in uniform told bystanders that they had not been ordered out of the meeting, but had left voluntarily when it was suggested that Hearst sympathizers should go. "The Star-Spangled Banner" was played after the Hearst supporters had left the meeting, but previously the band had played "America," the music of which is, of course, the same as that of "God Save the King."

MAYOR UPHOLDS HEARST.

Lauds Publisher on Receiving a Memorial on His Appointment.

A committee made up of residents of Brooklyn, headed by Edmund O'Connor of 7,225 Sixth Street, Brooklyn, called on Mayor Hylan yesterday and presented a memorial with 3,000 signatures commending his appointment of William Randolph Hearst as a member of the Soldiers' Welcoming Committee.

On receiving the memorial which said that Mr. Hearst had done more than anybody else to support the Government during the war and that Mr. Hearst was opposed to "privilege, plutocracy, and autocracy," the Mayor said in reply:

"I want to thank you for the presentation of this memorial with all these names in commendation of Mr. Hearst, who is a member of the Mayor's Committee. There is no man to my mind who has done more for the people of this city, State, and country than has Mr. Hearst. He has fought the profiteers in ice, the profiteers in coal, the profiteers in milk, the profiteers in foodstuffs, and at all times he has stood on the side of the people against the interests, the special interests, who are endeavoring to condemn him.

"Of course they realize that Mr. Hearst's papers take the side of the people, and tell the people just what these profiteers and exploiters are doing. Consequently, they are embittered against him because of his publicity of their exploitation of the people, which deprived them of benefits, financial or otherwise, which they received from such exploitation. Mr. Hearst should be commended for the good work he is doing in this city and throughout the State and nation in behalf of the people. I want to thank the committee for presenting this memorial to me in commendation of Mr. Hearst."

QUESTION MME. ARTOIS.

Department of Justice Officials Ask Writer for Hearst to Explain.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 17.—Department of Justice officials today summoned "Mme. Marie Philippine Artois," self-styled spy in Belgium for the Allies, while in the employ of the German Government and writer of sensations for Hearst's Chicago Herald and Examiner, to explain claims to "letters of recognition from the United States Department of Justice."

When questioned the closest that she could come to such letters was one from a "four-minute man" in St. Paul. He is J. Harry Lewis, editor of Crescent Monthly, and the letter praised a story she had written.

She admitted to Government operatives that she had received payment from Bernstorff for spreading German propaganda in this country prior to America's entrance into the war, but protested that she was "intimidated" into doing it.

She "explained" the bogus advertising she has received by blaming her press agent, George H. Coryell, for mistaking the "four-minute man" letter for a Department of Justice epistle.

STRIKE ON JULY 4 IS MOONEY VERDICT

Chicago Convention Decides, However, That Walkout Shall Occur Only as Last Resort.

VICTORY OF CONSERVATIVES

After Fiery Debate Bolshevist Element Is Defeated, and Body Pays Tribute to President.

CHICAGO, Jan. 17.—A general strike of organized labor designed to paralyze every industry in the country beginning the 4th of next July, was decided upon today by the National Board Congress as a means of obtaining a new trial for Thomas J. Mooney and Warren Billings, if Federal intervention and every other means adopted to procure the desired relief fail.

The convention authorized the raising of a fund of $1,000,000 to carry on a campaign of education to liberate the labor leaders and to promote the proposed general strike. It is planned to finance the movement by levying an assessment of 50 cents on each member of organized labor in the country.

The convention, which concluded its four-day session tonight and adjourned, also adopted a resolution embodying a declaration of national policies affecting labor which demands that the people of Russia and Germany be permitted to work out their own destiny, that American troops be withdrawn from Russia, that all political and industrial prisoners receive the same consideration as prisoners of war, and proclaiming the dawn of a new day for true democracy in which the rights of labor shall be fully recognized.

The convention adopted the program recommended by the International Workers' Defense League to obtain the liberation of Mooney and Billings. This was presented to the delegates in the final report of the Committee on Resolutions. It provided that a committee of five labor representatives be named to go to Washington and ask President Wilson and members of Congress for Federal intervention.

Chairman Edward D. Nolan named the following committee to undertake this work:

JOHN FITZPATRICK, President of the Chicago Federation of Labor.

ALEXANDER HOWATT, President of the Kansas District, United Mine Workers of America.

MARTIN T. FLYZIK, President of the Washington District, United Mine Workers of America.

J. F. ANDERSON, Washington, D. C., Vice Presidents of the International Association of Machinists.

ANDREW FURUSETH, San Francisco, President of the International Seamen's Union.

The committee will ask that a special Assistant United States Attorney General be appointed to obtain the release of Mooney and Billings by habeas corpus proceedings or other means in order that they may have new trials in a court outside of California.

The Legislature of California will be asked to pass a law which will enable the courts of that State to grant new trials in cases where convictions are obtained by perjured evidence or other fraudulent means.

If these means fail, then organized labor will be asked to call the general strike. The plan of the International Workers' Defense League is that the general strike will not be called unless every other means to free the men shall fail.

The report of the resolution on the Mooney case read in part:

"Your committee realizes at this time that the grave industrial and economic power of labor may in the last analysis have to be invoked in order to demonstrate to the hostile and anti-labor interests that the labor movement of America is determined that real and substantial justice shall finally prevail in the Mooney case.

"Your committee takes the position that the program should be worked out and exhausted, step by step, until there is no remaining doubt among the laboring masses that there is no other solution left, and that solution will then lie in the use of the strike weapon.

"We therefore submit that no sporadic strike not properly organized will be of value.

"Your committee recommends that the taking of a strike vote commence at the earliest possible date, and that the vote shall be in and tabulated on or before June 1, and that the date for general strike be set for the fourth of July, 1919, the day of American independence.

"The American Federation of Labor will be asked to indorse the general strike at its next annual convention.

The Mooney case program resulted in fiery debate lasting five hours in the course of which radical delegates opposed sending a committee to Washington to ask Federal intervention, and demanded that the date of the general strike be set for May 1. The conservatives finally succeeded over the Bolshevist element in having the committee report adopted by a vote of more than two to one. In the discussion President Wilson's name was hissed and July 4 was referred to as "the Master's Holiday."

Later William Spooner of Oakland, Cal., paid a tribute to President Wilson for his sympathetic attitude toward labor and the convention by a rising vote extended thanks to the President for his efforts to obtain Mooney's release.

William Kobbs of Boston said that labor had often been damned by ill considered strikes, and he warned the radicals that the Mooney strike might fail if it was called for May 1 without sufficient time properly to organize the movement.

C. L. Nicholsen of Cleveland, Morris Braun of New York, and others spoke in support of the committee report.

Chairman Nolan was compelled to adjourn the convention under the gavel over the loud protests of the radical delegates, who wanted to stay and pass other resolutions.

AIMS OF JEWISH WORKERS.

Dr. Magnes Addresses Their First Labor Congress.

Dr. J. L. Magnes, speaking yesterday at the First Jewish Labor Congress at 210 East Eighty-sixth Street, which is to continue with sessions until tomorrow, said that the first thing the organized Jewish workers will do is to declare their solidarity with the hand and head workers of all peoples and of all nationalities. The Jews sympathize with the aspirations of all peoples and nations for freedom, he asserted, because Jewish freedom can be attained only by a world politically free.

"The Jewish people in Poland, for instance, can be free only if there be a free Polish people," said he. "And the Polish people can be freed only if there be a free Polish laboring class and the establishment of the fundamental conceptions of democracy and of justice and of right. Take the present situation in Russia and Germany. The revolution set creative forces free, and see what a large company of Jews was available for immediate service—Socialist revolutionaries, and Mensheviki and Bolsheviki, majority and minority Socialists—whatever they may be called; and I assume that it is not a question at all at this moment of agreeing or disagreeing with any one of them.

"Jews are to be found among the trusted leaders and the routine workers of all those revolutionary parties. There are some of us who say that we ought not to admit this, because it will lead to anti-Semitism. What if it does? It will be another evidence in our long history of that stupidity, of that brutality, which we want the free men and women of the world to condemn and crush out."

There are some 500 delegates to the congress, representing organized Jewish labor throughout the country, who seek to attain recognition and guarantees for civil, political, and national rights for the Jews in the countries of Europe, where they are now deprived of those rights.

COLUMBIA NEEDS $600,000.

Four Weeks' Drive Begun to Reach Every Alumnus in World.

Alumni of Columbia University launched a drive for $600,000 to pay running expenses incurred during the war at a dinner and conference held last night at the Waldorf-Astoria. More than 800 members were present, including a delegation from Barnard College. President Butler, as the guest of honor, expressed his appreciation of the alumni in organizing for financial aid at a time peculiarly critical for the university.

"Columbia's emergency, while caused by the war," he said, "really goes back to the panic of 1893, which rendered it necessary to buy the present site and erect the building on borrowed money representing $3,000,000.

"The university saved about $100,000 in salaries of its staff who entered the pay of the Government, but the loss of students' fees and the increased cost of operation were so great that in June last the deficit was about $215,000. The deficit this coming year will be, from the best estimates, the $600,000 which the alumni are preparing to raise."

Following an address by former United States District Attorney H. Snowden Marshall of the Alumni Association of the University of Virginia, methods of conducting the drive were explained by Charles Sumner Ward, who has been active in the Red Cross and Y. M. C. A. drives, and by Frederick Courtney Barber, who will be the Director General of Columbia's drive.

Plans have been made to reach every Columbia alumnus in every part of the world, and the drive will continue for four weeks. Twenty teams of ten men each will have charge of the New York territory. Frederick Coykendall presided at the meeting in the absence of Willard V. King.

Among those on the Executive Committee are George W. Seligman, James Duane Livingston, Ambrose D. Henry, William A. Meikleham, Charles E. Hayden, John G. Sage, Alexander M. Welch, Charles H. Mapes, Dr. Samuel W. Lambert, Mrs. George Hellman, Mrs. James L. Laidlaw, and Miss A. C. Wheelock.

Governor to Visit All Cities of State.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, N. Y., Jan. 17.—Governor Smith announced today his intention of visiting all the larger cities of the State from time to time, to hear complaints of citizens or to give his personal attention to other State matters. "My present idea is that I should give the other end of the State a chance, as well as New York, in making known its wishes," declared the Governor. Adoption of this policy was prompted by the success of his hearings in New York last Saturday, when he was available to the public in the Governor's Room in the City Hall.

CLUBS ADOPT PLAN FOR SEASON LIMIT

Payroll of Each Team to be Limited to an Amount Between $75,000 and $100,000.

GIANTS FORCED ACTION

The ball players of the National League will not be asked to accept minor league salaries, after all. The $11,000 monthly salary limit, which was adopted by the club owners three days ago, was rescinded at a meeting of the League yesterday. It was a foregone conclusion that no major league club could operate on the limited-salary plan, but the National League passed the measure, evidently believing that the American League would also adopt some similar rule.

When the American League refused to make a wholesale cut in players' salaries there was nothing for the National League to do but go back to something like the old standard salary. President John A. Heydler would not say what the new salary limit would be. It was announced by President Heydler that no monthly limit had been set, but that a season's limit had been decided on.

It is reported that the season's salary limit agreed upon will be between $75,000 and $100,000.

When the club owners assembled in President Heydler's office yesterday, the New York and Chicago Clubs took a firm stand on having the vote of three days before rescinded. Several suggestions were made until the salary limit for the season was raised to a high figure, although not as high as some of the teams had during the past few seasons. The owners of the Giants and Cubs still held out for a higher figure, and finally the League approved a season's figure which met the approval of all clubs. The vote on the new season's pay roll was unanimous.

The action of the National League on the reduction of salaries was taken on the basis of the large losses which many of the clubs sustained last season. After much discussion the club owners who favored the radical retrenchment policy were finally won over when it was explained that the coming season in the national game promises to be so prosperous that the receipts will easily come up to normal.

With the return to a normal salary list, the National League club owners are already planning to be more liberal with their Spring training plans. When Manager Robinson of the Dodgers learned that President Ebbets was planning to take the Brooklyn Club to Richmond, he explained that the weather at Ebbets Field at that time of the Spring would be about as favorable as the weather in Richmond. The plan now is to send the Dodgers to Florida or Georgia to train, and it is expected that in a few days Manager Robinson will announce his Spring plans.

The Detroit Club has already taken over the Yankees' training park in Macon, and the Boston Braves will be near by, at Columbus, Ga. The Yanks and Giants will not be very far apart in Florida, the Yanks going to Jacksonville and the Giants to St. Petersburg. Although there has been some talk of the Yankees and Braves again joining on their trip North for an exhibition tour, it is probable that the Braves will pair up with Detroit, and that the Yankees and the Giants will play the principal Southern cities on their way North in April. Manager Huggins plans to take a squad of pitchers South as early as March 20.

NO BIG LEAGUE "FARMS."

Minors Cut Last Connecting Link with Major Organizations.

The major leagues can not longer use minor league clubs as "farms." The optional agreement between the two organizations has been done away with and every minor league player in the future must be the sole property of the club with which he plays. The receiving and releasing of players under optional agreement is a thing of the past.

The minor leagues yesterday appointed a committee to draw up an agreement with the National Commission in relation to the recognition of the territorial rights, contracts, and reservations. This agreement will be presented to the National Commission for consideration today.

The committee also provided fines ranging from $100 to $1,000, according to classification, for minor league clubs violating the rule forbidding optional agreements with major league clubs. In the past minor league teams have taken major league youngsters and used them until they were ready to come up to the major league standard. In the future the minors and majors can obtain players from each other only through purchase.

The minor leagues believe that the new arrangement of conducting their own business will raise the standard of the various organizations. Joe Tinker of Columbus last night predicted that in a couple of seasons the standard of baseball in the American Association and other Class AA leagues would be on a par with the major leagues.

PRINCETON, N. J., Jan. 17.—Princeton opened her basket ball season here tonight by defeating the Rutgers five 28 to 21. The play of both teams during the first half was ragged, neither showing up to advantage. The half ended 14 to 13, with the Tigers in the lead.

Meigh of Midlothian by 4 and 3 in today's semifinal. Parker, playing against F. N. B. The score was 15 to 10½. The Canadian players outrode their opponents, especially in the second period, when Kinney, playing at No. 2, brought his total number of goals up to 8.

The Rovers had a handicap of 4 and were penalized half a point for a foul. Levenski, playing at No. 1 for the Rovers, played a fine game and scored 6 goals.

The White Owls and the Royal Air Force teams are now tied for first place, with three victories each. These teams will meet on next Wednesday night at 10 o'clock in a match which should be the fastest of the season.

SPEAR IN GOOD FORM.

Wins Two Games in Class C Billiard Tourney.

George W. Spear, Metropolitan Class C champion, gained a victory in the matinée match of the national Class C 18.2 balk-line championship tournament at Lawler Brothers Academy, Brooklyn, yesterday. Spear defeated Humboldt Foss by the score of 150 points to 70, in thirty-nine innnings.

As a beginning to his string Spear led off with 20 carroms from the spot shot. In his sixth inning he compiled a cluster of 32 that was the top run of the match. During this run he held the ivories bunched.

Spear held to an average of approximately 7 for his first nine turns at the table. At this period Foss began to spread the balls somewhat. Spear's average thereafter suffered through misses on difficult cushion combinations. The champion did well to finish with an average of 3 33-39; and top runs of 32, 20, and 15.

The high run of Foss was 12. Foss did not appear to possess the delicacy of touch necessary for close balk line.

In the evening Spear scored his second success of the day when he defeated Ardie Wickers by a count of 150 to 84 in forty-seven innings. Spear took the lead after the tenth inning and never relinquished it. The champion had a high run of 19 and an average of 3 9-47. Wickers had a high run of 12.

The other evening contest resulted in a victory for Gus Gardner over Jesse T. Jaeger, by a score of 150 to 97. Gardner completed his string in thirty innings, for an average of 5, and he had two high runs of 18.

BABE RUTH COMES HIGH.

Red Sox Slugger Says His Demands May "Knock Frazee Silly."

BOSTON, Jan. 17.—Babe Ruth of the Red Sox, who was the outstanding figure of the world's series between the Boston and Chicago teams, has not yet come to terms with the club. Ruth says that he believes that his work last season should be rewarded by a big contract for this year.

"I am going to ask for a figure in my contract for next season," said the home-run slugger and pitcher, "which may knock Mr. Frazee silly, but nevertheless I think I am deserving of everything I ask."

Coar Wins Cue Tournament.

Frank W. Coar, by defeating Jacob Klinger last night at Daly's in the Class A billiard tournament of the A. A. B. A. by the score of 300 to 198, won the championship of the class. Coar outplayed his opponent. He made a high run of 61 and averaged 12-12-24. Klinger's best effort was 27 and he averaged 8 14-23. Coar, Klinger, and Hal Coleman stand in the order named in the final championship standing.

BIG TRADE CLOSES BASEBALL CONCLAVE

Boston, Washington, and Detroit Make Three-Cornered Deal Involving Six Players.

The biggest deal of the baseball conference was put through yesterday when the Washington, Boston, and Detroit Clubs made a three-cornered trade which sends Shortstop Hal Janvrin of the Red Sox to Washington, George Dumont, the Washington pitcher, and Oscar Vitt, the Detroit third baseman, to the Red Sox, and Chick Shorten, the Washington outfielder, Slim Love, the Red Sox pitcher, and Eddie Ainsmith, the Washington backstop, to Detroit.

This is the most important trade that has been made in some time and was arranged so as to benefit all clubs concerned. Washington needed a shortstop to take the place of Doc Lavan, who is through with the game. The Red Sox were badly in need of a third baseman, and in Vitt they landed one of the best fielders and batsmen in the business. Detroit got a promising outfielder in Shorten, and the Tiger catching staff is strengthened by the addition of Ainsmith, who for many years has been the catcher for Walter Johnson. Another Detroit acquisition is Dan Howley, formerly manager of Toronto. He was signed yesterday by Manager Hughey Jennings as coach and scout.

Just as soon as Jake Daubert of Brooklyn adjusts his legal differences with the Brooklyn Club he will probably figure in a trade. Each day of the league conference brought forth new rumors of offers for Daubert. It is known that Manager Robinson will not let his first baseman go unless he gets something worth while in return. Cincinnati is said to be angling for Daubert, as it is not expected that Chase will play with the Reds again, even if he is cleared of the charges now pending against him in the National League. It is expected that President Heydler will give Chase a hearing within a short time.

Manager Huggins of the Yankees made another attempt yesterday to land Outfielder Bobby Roth for the New York Club. It is stated that he offered Pitcher Dutch Leonard to Manager Lee Fohl, but the proposition was turned down.

N. Y. U. WINS CLOSE GAME.

Defeats Wesleyan After Playing Two Extra Periods.

MIDDLETOWN, Conn., Jan. 17.—Wesleyan and New York University broke even at the close of the basket ball game tonight, and two extra periods of five minutes each had to be played before the game could be decided, the visitors finally winning, 43 to 37.

At the close of the game the score was 35 to 35. In the last extra period Marin and Holman played desperately for New York, and between them caged three baskets.

The summary:

N. Y. U. (43.)	Position.	Wesleyan. (37.)
Holman	L. F.	Travis
Marin	R. F.	Ryalls, Davis, Cole
Delaney	C.	Hattman
Brown	L. G.	Deppen, Gravatt
Egan	R. G.	Dixon

Goals from floor—Marin, (6.) Holman, (4.) Delaney, (5.) Egan, Ryalls, (7.) Travis, (6.) Hartman, (5.) Goals from fouls—Marin, (6.) Egan, Gravatt. Referee—Johnson of Springfield Y. M. C. A. College. Timer—Mr. Hubbell. Time of halves—Ten minutes each.

BAILEY WINS FOR BARNARD.

Two Goals Near Finish Result in 23 to 19 Victory.

Barnard School's basket ball team won its seventh straight victory yesterday when it defeated the Ethical Culture School five, by a score of 23 to 19. Up to the last five minutes of play the Ethical Culture aggregation led. At that time the score was 18 to 16. Then T. Bailey caged two field goals in rapid succession, giving Barnard the victory.

The line-up:

Barnard. (23.)	Position.	Ethical C., (19.)
Bolles	R. F.	Kurtz
Farrell	L. F.	Brennan
Robertson	C.	Doolittle
Tighe	R. G.	Levien
Hubbell	L. G.	Willenchick

Field goals—Bolles, Farrell, T. Bailey, (2.) Robertson, (5.) Kurtz, (4.) Brennan. Goals from foul—Robertson, (5.) Kurtz, (9.) Substitutions—For Barnard School: T. Bailey for Farrell, Campbell for Tighe. Referee—William T. Cooke, De Witt Clinton H. S. Time of halves—Fifteen minutes.

Bill Donovan to Lead Skeeters.

Bill Donovan, former manager of the Yankees, has been signed to manage the Jersey City Club of the International League next season.

Damico Leads in Scoring.

St. John's College of Brooklyn prep basket ball team defeated the Fordham University prep quintet last night on the Brooklyn college's court by a score of 29 to 15. Damico, the St. John's forward, made the victory possible for his team. He caged eight field goals and eleven from foul, for a total of 27 points. The St. John's five led throughout, ending the first half in the van by 16 to 7.

SELLERS LOSES FAST RACE.

Barnes of Boys' Club Beats Champion in 1,000-Yard Run.

By a margin of about three yards, J. J. Barnes of the Boys' Club defeated Jack B. Sellers, New York A. C., junior national 1,000-yard champion, last night in the 1,000-yard handicap run at the 71st Regiment Armory. Barnes had a handicap of 55 yards, and covered the distance in 2:23. Sellers, starting from scratch, made his bid for the first place too late, and this bit of bad judgment cost him the leading prize. J. P. Knox of the Morningside A. C., who had 57 yards start on Sellers, finished third.

Pat McDonald of the New York A. C., former shotputting champion, failed to retrieve the handicaps he allotted in the twelve-pound shotput. This event was won by Jack Lichtman of the Clark House A. A., who had a handicap of 6 feet and returned the winning performance of 52 feet 6¼ inches. McDonald failed to place.

The program was given over mostly to competitions of the 71st Regiment, N. Y. G. These events furnished plenty of interesting sport for the service men and the crowd of about 5,000 which jammed the armory.

MANUAL OUTPLAYS ERASMUS ON ICE

Commercial Also Defeats Boys' H. S. Sextet in P. S. A. L. Hockey Tournament.

Manual Training High School's hockey sextet defeated the Erasmus Hall H. S. skaters by 4 goals to 2, and Commercial H. S. vanquished Boys' H. S., 3 to 0, in the two games decided yesterday at the Brooklyn Ice Palace, in the Public Schools Athletic League hockey tournament.

Manual Training's success places the team in front in the tournament standing, with two victories and no defeats. The victory came after a rough game, in which penalties were handed more freely than in any other game of the tournament to date. Bob Hall, Erasmus Hall's star cover point, was the chief offender. He was ruled off twice, once for tripping and again for slashing. For each offense his period of retribution was two minutes, and in that time the Manual Training boys lost no chances to score goals.

The Manual Training sextet ended the first period in the lead by 2 to 1, Callahan and Berry counting for the victors, while Rollins scored for Erasmus Hall. In the second period Sparks and Jahn scored goals, giving Manual Training a commanding lead. Hall shot one goal for Erasmus in this period.

Commercial's victory over Boys' came after the teams had battled through the first period and part of the second without either side scoring. The Boys' defense weakened in the final few minutes of play, and three Commercial goals were scored in quick succession. Feinler got two of them and Fleig the other.

The lineups:

Manual T., (4.)	Position.	Erasmus H., (2.)
Tredwell	G.	Huntington
Berry	P.	Hartwell
Titus	C. P.	Hall
Callahan	C.	Cress
Sparks	L. W.	Rollins
Jahn	R. W.	Wyckoff

Goals, first period—For Erasmus Hall: Rollins in 8:40. For Manual Training: Callahan in 10:58, Berry in 11:58. Second period—For Erasmus Hall: Hall in 7:16. For Manual Training: Jahn in 6:18, Sparks in 9:30. Referee—Thomas Howard, Hockey Club of New York. Goal umpires—Thomas Howard, Jr., United States Navy, and B. Farah, University of Pennsylvania. Timekeepers—C. Griffen, Swarthmore, and Fred B. Mohle, Brooklyn Hockey Club. Time of periods—Fifteen minutes each. Penalties—Hall, 2 minutes for tripping; Hall, 2 minutes for slashing; Sparks, 2 minutes for tripping.

Commercial, (3.)	Position.	Boys', (0.)
Thomas	G.	Rums
Peak	F.	Wieting
Jewell	C. F.	McMoud
Feinler	C.	Conner
Horstman	L. W.	Pepe
Fleig	R. W.	Baldwin

Goals, second period—For Commercial: Feinler in 6:19. Feinler in 13:24. Fleig in 14:30. Referee—Thomas Howard, Hockey Club of New York. Goal umpires—Thomas Howard, Jr., United States Navy, and B. Farah, University of Pennsylvania. Timekeepers—G. Griffen, Swarthmore, and Fred B. Mohle, Brooklyn Hockey Club. Time of periods—Fifteen minutes.

Barton Victor at Pool.

George Barton defeated Max Barbe last night at Doyle's Billiard Academy in the national pocket billiard championship tournament of the A. A. B. A. The score was 100 to 60. Barton retained the lead throughout the game, never at any time was his success in doubt. High runs of 15 and 11 were made by winner and loser respectively

SEND THEATRE TAX APPEAL TO WILSON

Ziegfeld Cables to President as Friend and Well-Wisher of Stage.

560,000 SIGN PETITIONS

Musical Managers Join in Asking Protest by 2,000,000 in Women's Clubs Against Double Tax.

A direct appeal to President Wilson was made yesterday by Florenz Ziegfeld, Jr., as a part of the campaign of the theatrical managers to head off the 20 per cent. amusement tax. Mr. Ziegfeld's cablegram, sent to the President in Paris, read as follows:

"The distressing gravity of the situation that now confronts American theatres inspires the sending of this cable to you as a genuine friend and well-wisher of the dramatic profession, with its best interests undoubtedly close at your heart. In every country in the strenuous times of war the theatre has been properly encouraged as a means of furnishing the amusement and recreation absolutely necessary to the heavily burdened masses.

"The American theatres and all connected with them have contributed magnificently to the winning of the war. Not alone have they furnished innocent diversion, but they have raised vast sums for charitable purposes, and have aided largely in the successful exploitation of the Government's various Liberty loans. They have sacrificed their own interests, and willingly suffered, in the greater needs of their country. The placing of a 10 per cent. tax on all theatre tickets was a heavy exaction that only the most prosperous and successful theatrical organizations could withstand. It forced many out of business altogether, and brought non-employment to a great number of men and women in an honored profession whose hand has invariably been outstretched to aid others, and whose heroic services have never yet failed in fire, famine, flood, war, and other devastating horrors.

"And now, with this gigantic burden laid upon the weak shoulders of the theatre, it is proposed by the Government authorities in Washington that this already severe tax of 10 per cent. should be increased to 20 per cent. Not only would such a drastic procedure be an absolute wrong and crying injustice to the theatre itself, but to the whole American people. If this appalling plan is carried into effect it would mean the death-blow to all American theatrical interests, for, with the added high cost of labor and material, bankruptcy and ruin face all concerned, manager, actor, and workman alike. Theatres and companies will be forced to close, and many thousands will be thrown out of employment. I earnestly appeal to you as our friend to use your every endeavor to avert an overwhelming catastrophe."

Speeches and circulation of anti-tax petitions were continued last night at theatres in this city and throughout the country. It was estimated, from returns made yesterday to the Managers' Committee, that 560,000 persons had signed the petition on Thursday night. Of this number approximately 375,000 signatures were obtained in New York.

The National Musical Managers' Association met yesterday in the offices of Milton Aborn and voted to uphold the United Managers' Protective Association in their action. After the meeting about 300 telegrams were sent to concert managers and musical clubs, said to represent 2,000,000 members, all over the country, urging that immediate protests against the increased tax be lodged with the heads of the Congressional Conference Committee.

The Merchants' Association, the Broadway Association, and the Hotel Men's Association will hold meetings this afternoon, at which protests against the tax will be made to Washington. Lawrence McGuire of the Real Estate Board sent a telegram yesterday in which possible depreciation of theatrical property was urged as a reason why the tax should not be increased.

At a committee meeting of the United Managers' Protective Association in the Century Theatre the possible impairing of the theatre's effectiveness in the coming Fifth Liberty Loan drive was considered, and a long telegram was dispatched to Carter M. Glass, Secretary of the Treasury, earnestly pleading with him to do his utmost to "save the theatres whose industry in previous loan drives had been publicly acknowledged by former Secretary McAdoo."

William H. Edwards, Internal Revenue Collector for the Second District, said yesterday that he had already received many protests against the proposed tax.

Frank Morrison, Secretary of the American Federation of Labor, came to New York from Washington last night to confer with Charles C. Shay, head of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes, and Joseph N. Weber, President of the American Federation of Musicians, regarding the effect which the new tax would have upon labor. He was informed that 40,000 back stage workers and 800 music locals would be affected.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

"The Little Journey," now at the Little Theatre, will move to the Vanderbilt a week from Monday. "The Gentile Wife" will close at the latter house tonight.

In the cast of "The Slumber Party," now in rehearsal, are Peggy O'Neil, Frisco, Charles Ruggles, Zelda Sears, William Halligan, Dama Sykes, Bert Gardner, Fred Leslie, Mary Milburn, and Olga Mishka. The piece is a musical comedy.

Marie Dressler will soon return to the New York stage under the management of the Shuberts.

Frances Byrne will be in the cast of "The New Song" to be seen here.

Frederic Santley, discharged from the Naval Air Service, has been engaged for the Cohan & Harris musical production, "The Royal Vagabond."

ZIONISTS START NEW DRIVE.

Will Try to Raise $3,000,000 for Palestine Restoration.

The Zionist Organization of America is forming a committee of one hundred, covering all the trades and industries in the city, for the $3,000,000 Palestine Restoration Fund campaign, to be launched tomorrow and continue two weeks. Judge Julian W. Mack, President of the organization, will give a dinner tonight at the City Club, where captains will be appointed for the various industries and districts of the city.

The committee representing the trades, industries, and professions includes Sigmund Eisner, who has started the fund with a $50,000 contribution; Harry Fischel, Bernard Semel, S. C. Lamport, Judge Moses H. Grossman, E. M. Rosenthal, S. Liebowitz, Sol Strook, Walter E. Meyer and others.

Judge Mack, explaining the object of the fund, said last night that it was a "radical departure" from funds hitherto collected for Jewish purposes.

"The Palestine Restoration Fund," he said, "does not concern itself with immediate charitable relief. Its purpose is to build. Of the $3,000,000, $420,000 will be devoted to the Zionist Medical Unit for sanitary improvement, hospital service, dispensary aid, and public health work in Palestine.

"To education $460,000 is to be devoted. Palestine has an educational governing body which subsidizes all secular and all religious schools, provided that Hebrew is the medium of instruction and certain standards of sanitation and hygiene are maintained.

"For the Zionist Commission's further operations $550,000 will be needed. A Judiciary, an Agricultural Department, a Bureau of Commerce and Labor, a Department of Relief, a Board of Education, and a Health Department are contemplated.

"One million dollars will be invested in the Zionist financial institutions, the Jewish Colonial Trust and Anglo-Palestine Company. It is an excellent business institution which never forgets that it exists for the purpose of developing Palestine and aiding the Jews of the land. And they need much aid—not charitable, but business aid—short time loans, loans for co-operative societies, loans that mean reconstruction in every sense of the term.

"Then we shall need about a quarter of a million for special loans, to communities, merchants, and individuals, and in addition there is the vast administration in this country.

"The historic opportunity confronting the Jewish people imposes a clear and solemn obligation on every individual Jew. The world can give the Jewish people only the opportunity to restore their homeland. The restoration must be accomplished by the Jews themselves."

Concert at Art Museum Tonight.

At the Metropolitan Museum of Art this evening the third of the big public promenade concerts, which are a gift of a friend of the Museum to the people, will begin at 8 P. M. To accommodate the guests and permit those who attend the concert to visit the collections comfortably these will be open continuously from 10 A. M. to 10:45 P. M. The Museum restaurant will be open until 8 o'clock to allow guests to take dinner. On the program there will be represented Elgar, Beethoven, Dvorak, Tschaikowsky, Moussorgsky, Shubert, Grieg, Handel, and Wagner music by a symphony orchestra, David Mannes conductor.

Chicago Opera's First Week's Bills.

The Chicago Opera Association announced here last night the operas for its opening week at the Lexington Theatre, to start Monday, Jan. 27, with Mary Garden in Fevrier's "Gismonda." Succeeding days add "Madame Butterfly," with Tamaki Miura, "Romeo and Juliet," with Yvonne Gall and John O'Sullivan, and "Monna Vanna," with Garden. On Friday, Jan. 31, Campanini will produce Leroux's "Le Chemineau," followed by both "Thais" and "Tales of Hoffmann" next day.

Charles F. Hackett, Tenor, Arrives.

Charles F. Hackett, an American lyric tenor, who has been away two years in Italy and South America, arrived yesterday from Rio Janeiro on the Swedish steamship Sagia to join the Metropolitan Opera Company. After finishing his contracts in Buenos Aires and Rio Janiero Mr. Hackett would have sailed for New York more than a month ago, but was attacked by Spanish influenza which is epidemic in Brazil. He created the tenor rôle at the world's premier of Puccini's opera, "Rondine" at the Colon Theatre, Buenos Aires.

"Oberon" Sung in English.

"Oberon" in English was sung to a large audience at the Metropolitan last evening. Mr. Bodanzky conducted his arrangement of the score, and Miss Ponselle, Mr. Martinelli, and others sang Weber's melodies. The opera is reannounced for Wednesday, Jan. 29, more than a week away, while on the preceding day, Jan. 28, there will be an extraordinary Tuesday matinée of "Madame Butterfly"—with Farrar and Lazaro.

Haag Candidate for Chamberlain.

Joseph Haag, Secretary of the Board of Estimate, announced yesterday that he was a candidate for the office of City Chamberlain, which is to be filled by the Mayor between now and Feb. 1, when the resignation of Alfred Johnson becomes effective. Mr. Haag has been an employe of the city since 1870, when he began as a messenger boy in the Comptroller's office. He has been Secretary of the Board of Estimate for ten years.

MUSIC NOTES.

Abraham Haitovitch will play and Esther Benson will sing in aid of the Guild for Jewish Blind tomorrow at the Educational Alliance.

W. Lyndon Wright will conduct the University Heights Choral Society's first concert next Tuesday in the New York University Hall.

GARFIELD RESCINDS SOFT COAL RULES

Fuel Administration Expects Decrease in Price to Follow New Order.

ELIMINATES ZONE SYSTEM

New Regulations End Control of Purchasing Agents' Commissions and Profit Margins.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—Fuel Administration officials expect a decrease in the price of bituminous coal and coke to result from an order today discontinuing maximum prices on these commodities and eliminating the zone system of their distribution. The order is effective Feb. 1, but does not affect anthracite.

The regulations rescinded by today's order include those governing purchasing agents' commissions and profit margins allowed wholesale and retail dealers. The Fuel Administration announced, however, that these were subject to reinstatement if price, wage, labor, production, or other conditions which may arise require it.

Reduction in the demand for bituminous coal as the result of the ending of hostilities and the mild weather this Winter made it impossible to maintain maximum prices, officials said.

The only restrictions on domestic consumption of fuel that remain are on anthracite and natural gas.

With the issuing of the order affecting bituminous coal and coke, the Fuel Administration began preparations for the stoppage of most of its activities. Orders went to district representatives to give notice to employes that the offices would cease functioning on Feb. 1.

SENTENCE 43 I. W. W.'S TO TERMS IN PRISON

One to Ten-Year Terms Imposed—Sentence on Three Held Up by Counsel.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., Jan. 17.—Sentences of one to ten years' imprisonment were imposed today by District Judge F. H. Rudkin of Spokane on forty-three of the forty-five defendants convicted in the Industrial Workers of the World anti-war conspiracy case.

Sentence of Miss Theodora Pollok, Basile Safforea, and A. L. Fax, the only defendants represented by an attorney, was held up by their counsel, who said that a motion for a new trial would be offered.

The sentences came as a climax to a morning of oratory in which many of the forty-three defendants, who had maintained silence throughout the trial, made addresses to the court.

FRICKE OBJECTS TO JUDGE.

Man Accused of Treason Wanted Trial in Another Court.

Albert Paul Fricke, under indictment for treason, objected yesterday to trial before Federal Judge Mayer, before whom he was brought for pleading. In long affidavits by himself and his counsel, Thomas J. O'Neill, the complaint was made that Judge Mayer had shown himself prejudiced in favor of the Government, and that, therefore, another Judge should preside when the issue was tried.

After reviewing the proceedings and commenting on the unpleasant phase of duty devolving upon him to preside at a trial of a citizen for treason, Judge Mayer said that the duty must be performed if the orderly routine of court procedure was to be observed. The defendant, he said, had in no way prejudiced his case by his desire for another Judge to preside, and having conferred with Judges Learned and A. N. Hand, he declined to comply with the request to withdraw as the Presiding Judge.

Fricke, an agent for a German toy concern, was indicted for treason with Herman Wessells, alias Karl Rodiger, described as an officer in the German Navy and a spy in this country for the German Government. Both are in the Tombs.

John Quine Gives His First Recital.

John Quine, a young baritone of the Society of American Singers, made a good impression at his first recital in Aeolian Hall yesterday afternoon, singing an old air of Caccini and others arranged by Floridia, as well as new songs such as Treharne's "Mother, My Dear," which his audience would have encored. Kurt Schindler accompanied the singer, and William Hinshaw, President of the society, heard the closing group.

Sarah Sokolsky Fried reappeared as pianist and organist last evening in Aeolian Hall, as she has for several seasons. At the piano she began with the sonata Op. 111 of Beethoven, and later at the organ with Bach, a concert novel in manner rather than in material, though Mrs. Fried introduced a work by Richard Hammond among new composers.

AMES ART BRINGS $59,093.

Top Price of Closing Sale, $1,225, for a Royal Minton Porcelain.

At the closing sale of the art collection of the late Governor Oliver Ames of Massachusetts at the American Art Galleries yesterday afternoon the returns were $19,868, making a grand total for the collection, including the pictures, of $59,093. The highest price of the afternoon for an individual piece was $1,225, paid by Bernet, agent, for a Royal Minton porcelain Solon, pâte sur pâte vase, 25 inches high, body of rich olive green. The decorations were in white, the two principal groups on the body of the vase, "Cupid's Judgment" and "Cupids in Martial Array." It was signed "L. Solon," is said to have been the artist's masterpiece, and is from the Mary J. Morgan collection.

The famous Dennis cameo vase, also from the Mary J. Morgan collection, with designs of Venus and Cupids, with Pegasus for a terminal and winged horses' heads for handles, went to W. D. Breaker for $1,200. This was made at the Dennis works in England by George Woodall, the noted cutter, under the superintendence of Wilkes Webb, one of the greatest men in the glass industry. Two other vases from the Morgan collection, Royal Minton pâte sur pâte, signed by Solon, with designs of Minerva and Cupids, went to Mr. Breaker for $1,500.

A magnificent Sevres vase, with cover, went to B. A. Starbuck for $800. A large Indian carpet went to Henry M. Lloyd for $800, and a Kurdistan carpet to Noorian for $530, and an Iran carpet to Kent Costikyan for $475.

ROBBERS' AID TO PRISON.

Chauffeur Who Drove Highwaymen Gets 4 Years 9 Months.

Frank R. Gaffney, a chauffeur of 220 Crescent Street, Long Island City, who was convicted by a jury on a charge of implication in the robbery of a paymaster of the Westinghouse Electric Company on East Seventy-fourth Street, near Avenue A, was sentenced yesterday by Judge Rosalsky in General Sessions to from not less than four years and nine months to not more than nine years and nine months. Gaffney was the chauffeur of the automobile in which the three robbers made their escape. He denied any actual participation in the holdup and declared he had not known that his fares had committed a robbery. None of the thieves has been captured.

In passing sentence Judge Rosalsky said that chauffeurs often appeared too willing to lend their services to holdup men throughout the city.

THIS IS THE MAGNETIC POLE OF THIS PAGE

THERE are two north poles—the real, and the magnetic. The real pole is fixed, but the needle of the compass points to the magnetic pole.

This advertisement is not in the optical, actual mathematical center of this page. But when you have read the advertisements of all the plays—the biggest list of any city in the world—and have made your choice for tonight, and you begin to think about tickets, your mind calls in its secretary, your eye, and says:

"Find that McBride advertisement. See what the address is."

And your eye comes right to this space, as surely as a compass. We are not scientists, unless selling theatre tickets for more than forty years to satisfied customers makes us scientists. But we know that your eye is looking for those addresses. Here they are:

THE PRESIDENT'S TOUR.

Commenting on the reported intention of President WILSON to make a speaking tour of the country, in which he will set forth his arguments for his peace policies, The Rochester Post-Express says:

> It is a repeated report from abroad that the President regards his cordial reception as indorsement by the peoples of France, Great Britain, and Italy of his peace position. If his judgment is accurate, then these peoples seem to enjoy an advantage over his own nation; they must completely understand what the President is standing for, and a great part of this nation does not clearly understand this.

"These peoples" enjoy no advantages over "his own nation." They "clearly understand" that he desires to make war impossible or difficult in the future, and to that desire they give their "indorsement." His own nation understands that as well as do the cheering people in Europe. His own nation would give the same kind of indorsement that he has received from others, if he were to appear here, as he did there, merely as the man who represents that desire.

But when the President makes his speaking tour of the United States, if he does make it, he will not appear, as he did there, simply as the embodiment of a desire. By the time he arrives here the aspiration which he embodies will have begun, at least, to take solid form. There will be details to talk about, whether the whole peace treaty has been concluded or not. From the basis of a universal desire labor toward its realization will have begun. There is no quarrel about the desire, but there will be immediate differences of opinion about the form of its realization as soon as the Peace Conference begins to shape it. The President's tour, without doubt, will be for the purpose of reconciling these differences and explaining and defending the form the great work takes. Specifically, we assume, he will undertake to convince the people first, and through them the Senate, not that permanent peace is a good thing but that the things done at Versailles will advance that end.

PUTTING TEETH IN IT.

"The work of the Anti-Saloon "League will neither cease nor lessen "when the amendment goes into effect." That is one of the drawbacks of being a crusader—a drawback, that is, if you are a private individual supporting the crusade, an advantage if you make a living by crusading. On moral issues, where any compromise or concession is a covenant with death, you have to keep up the fight so long as the enemy survives anywhere. And your fight is both internal and external. When Islam had won Arabia it set forth to conquer Syria and Egypt, but meanwhile had to repress rebellions within Arabia itself. Bolshevism, having overrun Russia, goes out to overrun the world, but at the same time must put down counter-revolution at home. So the Anti-Saloon League will be kept busy in the struggle to enact prohibition abroad and enforce it here.

Its program offers small hope for those who clung to the conviction that, after all, prohibition would not really be prohibition for gentlemen of moderate tastes, nor for those who anticipated the evil day by laying in as much liquor as they could buy. The enforcement bill, which will doubtless go through Congress and the Legislatures as readily as did the amendment itself, provides that not only the manufacture, sale, and transportation but the possession of any liquor for beverage purposes shall be illegal. There is no minimum quantity permitted, at least in the statements made so far; it is going to be a crime to have any of the "vile stuff" at all. "An adequate search and seizure provision" will open the way for the invasion of suspected cellars by Federal and State officials, and a woeful prospect of blackmail by janitors and drivers of moving vans confronts the city dweller.

The battle with the hydra-headed and hydrophobic liquor serpent will not be moderated out of any consideration for art. Another clause of the Force bill inhibits "any advertise-"ment or notice containing the pict-"ure of a brewery, distillery, bottle, "keg, barrel or box, or other re-"ceptacle, represented as containing "intoxicating liquors." The word "advertisement" implies a commercial character, but the pliancy of our interpretations of the law before the indignation of moral militants is shown by the rejection of a similar implication in the Mann act; it is hardly to be doubted, in view of the prohibition tendency toward extreme measures, that before long this will be construed as justifying the destruction of any picture which displays a brewery, distillery, bottle, keg, barrel, box, or other receptacle. Now, this is quite a hardship to art. A certain small town on the Ohio River prides itself on a deserted and half-ruined brewery perched on a cliff, which on moonlit nights looks like a castle on the Rhine. Under the new law no artist could paint that moonlit scene in glorification of the beauties of Indiana, for his picture would have to contain a brewery—a ruined brewery, to be sure, but a brewery. And deputies of the Prohibition Commissioner would go through our museums, cutting up paintings in which appeared bottles containing liquor.

And what of literature? Newspapers and magazines containing liquor advertising have long been forbidden in certain dry States; but some of the best advertising of the forbidden joys of intemperance is in literary classics. Before long we may expect to see wholesale confiscation, and burning in the public square, of the writings of authors personally intemperate or given to mentioning rum without expression of disapproval. Those who possess the writings of Q. HORATIUS FLACCUS, OMAR KHAYYAM, or EDGAR ALLAN POE will do well to lock them up in the secret cabinet behind the chimney along with that last priceless bottle.

LYNCH LAW IN BERLIN.

Regrettable as is the manner of death, the work of private violence, not the law, that came to Dr. LIEBKNECHT and ROSA LUXEMBURG, it was to be expected, and does a summary, if irregular, justice to the fomenters of robbery, murder, and anarchy. The patience, the aversion to strong measures, perhaps the reluctance of the Majority Socialist Government to proceed against old associates, spared too long the Spartacan terrorists. A pitiful minority, they thrived for a time on the unwillingness of their adversaries to make the final test. Into a country permeated with the instinct of order they brought disturbance, started a revolution which lacked rebels, united against them substantially all other parties, most Germans.

These two leaders, the man violent but weak, the woman a termagant of the familiar revolutionary type, have perished miserably by the sword they drew. The defeat of the imitation Bolshevists, the victory everywhere where elections have been held of the parties of order, Conservatives, Centrists, Democrats, Majority Social Democrats, are of the best omen for a representative moderate National Assembly, for a responsible and stable Government. The Allies and the United States have hardly less interest than Germany itself in such an outcome.

GREEKS OF ASIA MINOR.

There never was a time from long before the writing of history when Asia Minor did not have a Greek population. The claims which the Greek Government published last week included territory long indisputably Greek. In the Sanjak of Smyrna alone there are 450,000 Greeks, more than double the number of Turks. In the vilayet of Buessa, Aivali, modern successor of an older colony, has nearly 30,000 inhabitants. Not merely on the coast, but scattered all about, artisans and peasants, and not merely fishermen and sailors and traders, as many believe, are Greeks. Along valleys through which flow rivers of old name, Meander and Hermus, in ancient cities, live these representatives of the secular Hellenism of Asia Minor.

Of the 2,500,000 or more Greeks in the Turkish Empire that was, these of that region of civilization and its memorials piled one above another, like the Troys of SCHLIEMANN'S Troy, make not the least appeal to the kindly interest of nations that have inherited their culture. Good old HERODOTUS is alone enough, if one could forget a multitude of other famous names, to make the Greek of Asia Minor a sympathetic figure. Dorian, Aeolian, Ionian most of all, come to the memory. The ingenuity, subtlety, liveliness that we like to ascribe to some favored communities of old Greeks live in no small measure in their faraway successors.

From the south, Greek civilization came to the southwestern shore of Asia Minor, thence spreading northward. Its memorials begin in the Neolithic Age. In the dim quaternary foretime, if the geologists guess right, the Aegean Sea was solid earth, binding together the later Balkan and Anatolian peninsulas. The Aegean islands and the salient coasts look back to some old catastrophe and land-swallowing. Long valleys screened by mountains but open to the sea of abundant rainfall made the Anatolian coasts a sort of paradise, green and bright, while Summer burned the Anatolian plateau. For ages Hellenism was great in Asia Minor. Nations, or city States of the familiar Greek type, got rich selling to Europe the productions of the mighty hinterland and charging all the traffic would bear on the East-going freight.

The splendor of Ionian art and literature is imperishable. Byzantine succeeded the pagan sway till the Turk, himself retaining the ceremonials of the empire he destroyed, submerged the old civilization. Travelers and archaeologists tell us of old Greek settlements hidden among the mountains, speaking still with considerable purity the ancient, unliterary dialects of Greek Asia Minor. A curious Greek community, if its inhabitants have escaped the mercies of the Turks, is that of the so-called Mezzo-Mezzos, of Jevizlik, Mohammedans in public, Orthodox Greek in private, who took an imprudent advantage of the Turkish millennium of 1908 openly to profess their real faith. In the interior again are or were Greek communities that have lost their Greek and talk Turkish, and Greeks of no Mediterranean look, descendants of ancient races conquered by the Greek States or Byzantium. May the new Hellenism flourish like the old!

A CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSIONER.

The term of Mr. WILLIAM GORHAM RICE as a State Civil Service Commissioner ends on Feb. 1. Nearly four years ago THE TIMES, knowing him as GROVER CLEVELAND'S assistant secretary, as Mr. ROOSEVELT'S successor in the United States Civil Service Commission, as a man who had given long thought and faithful service to the betterment of municipal, State, and national administration, testified to his fitness for his present post. His record in it for nearly four years much more than justifies that opinion and is his more than sufficient recommendation for reappointment.

Mr. SMITH, asked by the Executive Committee of the New York Civil Service Reform Association last Fall if he did not "agree that when a "Commissioner is to be appointed, the "State's business requires that he "should be not only sympathetic with "the law but technically prepared to "administer it wisely," replied, "I do."

Commissioner RICE is undeniably and eminently such a Civil Service Commissioner. Governor SMITH, a rare find among politicians, seems resolved to keep the promises he made in his canvass.

MR. LA FOLLETTE.

Senator LA FOLLETTE'S St. Paul speech of Sept. 20, 1917, contained passages which Americans worthy of the name cannot read without much of the indignation and anger that boiled up in Senator WILLIAMS in the Senate Thursday. After a long-drawn, half-hearted investigation the Senate, always too lenient of its errant members, gives a sort of Scotch verdict, to the effect that the speech "does not justify any action by the Senate." Only one Republican, the soon-to-leave SMITH of Michigan, voted against the Republican brother from Wisconsin. Republican harmony and votes will be sorely needed in the next Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE has little eccentricities of temperament that apologize for him to a certain extent; and it may be that, like CHARLES SUMNER, he is sometimes surprised by the effect of his own language. His entire misconception of public opinion in his opposition to the war may teach him to be more careful in future. He made enormous errors, to put it mildly. No resolution of the Senate, nothing but a steady patriotic conduct can restore him to public confidence. Doubtless he never meant to be disloyal; but a genius for singularity and enlargement of the bump of self-confidence have led him astray. He is eager to remake the social, economic, and political world. Can't he remake himself a little?

SHOULD BE CARRYING FOOD.

Many ships for the transportation of food are needed, in addition to those now in service, by the use of which we are exporting the 17,500,000 tons promised to England, France, and Italy, and also the quantities specified in agreements with the northern neutrals. Mr. HOOVER shows that the liberated lands must have 1,400,000 tons. His survey does not include Germany or the greater part of Austria. It is estimated that about 2,250,000 tons of German ships are now lying in the nation's ports. These, he says, are to be used in bringing food. But they must make long voyages to reach sources of supply near which at least 122 other German ships have been lying idle for more than four years.

Nothing is said about the thirty-eight in Argentine ports and the eighty-four in those of Chile. These vessels should be at work. They are conveniently placed for the food trade. Argentina sells meat and now has a wheat surplus of 163,000,000 bushels. The ships in Chilean waters could quickly cross the South Pacific to Australia and take cargoes there from 190,000,000 bushels of wheat that wait for transportation. And in Spain's harbors there are ninety German or Austrian ships. These should be in service. Spain will ask for nearly all of them to replace eighty-eight of her own vessels which German U-boats or mines destroyed, but her claim should not keep them idle. An agreement providing for the use of them could easily be made. The losses of Chile and Argentina have been comparatively small. Settlement of their claims would leave more than a hundred of the German ships now anchored in their waters absolutely free.

All of the 212 interned vessels held by the three countries ought to be at work now on the seas, at a time when the destruction of 4,000 ocean carriers by German torpedoes and mines makes it difficult to save millions from starvation.

RUSSIA IN POLAND.

Certain obstacles to self-determination have appeared in Poland, Lithuania, and adjacent territories. It cannot be said that they were not foreseen, but neither the Poles, the Lithuanians, nor the Allies seem to have taken precautions. A few days ago Poles and Lithuanians were disputing over the possession of Wilna, or Vilnius, to give it both names and preserve impartiality; but now Wilna is in the hands of an army of Russian Bolsheviki who are advancing toward Warsaw. Poles and Ukrainians are still fighting over Lemberg, and further east the tertius gaudens is getting ready to Bolshevize Galicia when Poles and Ukrainians have killed each other off.

Mr. PADEREWSKI, despite the pertinacity of would-be assassins, is still able to get about, and is trying to get General PILSUDSKI to reorganize the Polish Government and take in all parties. PILSUDSKI appears to be still holding out for a Government by his own supporters alone; and the ill-judged attempt of Prince SAPIEHA to bring about a reorganization by force does not seem to have promoted harmony. PILSUDSKI is an able man and has done great service to Poland; he was on the spot when the new Polish Government was set up, he took charge of it, and he has kept it going. Great differences separate his party and the National Democrats, whom Mr. PADEREWSKI represents at Warsaw; but on the fundamental question of protecting the liberty of Poland against the new Russian conquest there is no difference. Mr. PADEREWSKI bears credentials from the four million Poles in the United States; his personality and his efforts have done great service to the Polish cause; and his colleagues of the National Committee, notably Mr. DMOWSKI, have served their country well at the allied capitals. Just now Poland could use a Government of national defense which included PILSUDSKI and PADEREWSKI and any other statesman whose first interest is in seeing that his country keeps the liberty she has so lately won.

As for the allied Governments, they have given no sign of any particular interest in Poland. It might be thought that France and England and Italy and the United States could see some profit to themselves as well as to Poland in doing something to head off the reconquest by the Bolsheviki, but if any action is to be taken it will have to be taken soon.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Clearly the Crime of a Maniac. Fortunately for the preservation of a belief in the existence of a limit to the criminality of which human beings are capable, when confronted by an atrocity such as the murder of MARIE RIDDELL, one can, and from the circumstances of the deed must, recognize that it was committed by something less than and different from a man. For reason—the ability to think and act in a way not too far removed from normality—is required to bring its possessor within the category of the human race and to impose upon that race responsibility for what has been done.

Only madness explains such an act as this. It lacks all the motives that prompt human action; and not only that, it was the result of impulses of a kind exactly opposite to those characteristic of the human species in all its grades. Miss RIDDELL, as she was hurrying home, was not less safe than she would have been after arriving there from anybody except a lunatic. Her youth, her appearance, and her character made an appeal for protection, for kindness, that would have met scrupulous response in any part of the city. Her fate, therefore, points directly to the perpetrator of the murder, and he will be found if the police promptly and intelligently use the evidence at their disposal for the identification of the murderer.

His Theft Entirely Irrelevant. Somewhere, not necessarily, but probably, near the spot where Miss RIDDELL'S body was found there is a man who is known to many as different from other men, and different in ways and to a degree that have made all who know him think of him the moment they heard of the girl's death. It is for such a man that the police should seek.

They can safely ignore as irrelevant the fact that she was robbed of the few dollars in her purse. That was merely incidental. It discloses, not motive, but the gleam of shrewdness of which most maniacs are capable. Far more significant is the absence of the girl's left glove, and it is made so by the circumstance that there was the like disappearance of a left glove when another woman was similarly killed a few days ago and not far away.

Therein is more than a hint of an obsession—of what the psychiatrists call a compulsive neurosis. Such a neurosis cannot be hidden, and its compulsion is not and can not be resisted by its victim. It makes him in a sense irresponsible, but not in any such sense as to abolish, or even to weaken, society's right to defend itself against him. To the law he will probably seem able to discriminate between right and wrong—to be atrociously vicious. That will justify putting him to death when caught and convicted. But from any point of view his life is forfeit.

Mad dogs are killed, not because they are wicked, but because they are intolerably dangerous and can be made safe in no other way.

Enthusiasm Easily Explained. It can hardly be called surprising that when the people who gather in theatres are asked whether they are for or against increasing the tax on theatre tickets they respond with unanimity and vehemence that they do not want it done. Not while human nature remains what it is could any other answer be obtained to any like request in regard to that or any other tax.

Somebody has said that to be wise when in love and popular when laying a tax were both in the domain of the impossible. However it may be as regards the first point; there is no doubt of the second's soundness. All taxes are paid with reluctance, in part, probably, because the return for them is impersonal and for the most part immaterial, and in part on account of something between a suspicion and a conviction that the return is inadequate—that tax money is for those who spend it such "easy" money that they waste a lot of it. The theatre managers would have evoked an even more enthusiastic reply if they had asked the people in front of them if they didn't want the ticket tax abolished altogether. Of course they do. But what of it? Such questions and answers have nothing to do with the problem under consideration—that of raising money with which to meet the country's expenses and to pay its debts. A tax on theatre tickets would be popular, if any tax could be, because no other tax could be so easily avoided and of none other can it be said with as close an approach to truth that only they pay who choose to do so.

Whether this particular tax should be increased or not does not depend on the feeling toward such action of either managers or public, but on whether or not an increase of the tax will increase or diminish the amount that thus can be raised. As to that nobody seems to have any very definite information.

Statehood Has Its Own Dangers. In the new German federation proposed by the Ebert Government, almost as noticeable as the partition of Prussia and the disappearance of that sinister and detested name is the making of Berlin, with its suburbs, into a separate State, with the same rights of self-control as are to be exercised by the other German States geographically much larger.

Whether or not Berlin is to be the capital of the new federation seems to be as yet undetermined, but if the Germans, in their new love for America, follow the American plan they will establish somewhere else, as far from Berlin as they conveniently can, an analogue of our District of Columbia to be the seat and centre of political power.

But Berlin as a State will be, in that respect at least, an object of envy for New York City, so long and so cruelly the victim of rural control. Still, every now and then, not unimportant fractions of this city's population have been grateful for the protection from other fractions of it that "Albany" could and did give them. So the Berliners should think twice, and perhaps three times, before they consent to have themselves put in a magnificent but somewhat dangerous, isolation. The Bolsheviki—"Black Things," indeed!—may get them if they don't watch out.

The High Theatre Tax.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The appeal that theatre managers are about to make to the President of the United States with respect to the imposition of a 20 per cent. tax on theatre tickets should emanate from playgoers, who will pay the tax. If playgoers do not pay this tax, the ultimate sufferers will be the managers of theatres; but those who do go to theatres will pay the tax. This development of taxation is foolish and wrong. It is a poor return for the work done in many patriotic activities, notably the Liberty Loan campaigns, in which managers of theatres endeavored to outdo one another in patriotic service. We have willingly paid all along the tax on tickets, but this 20 per cent., which means 60 cents on many a theatre ticket, is rather too much for even the best American citizens. The orchestra ticket, for instance, is $2.50; the law allows the theatre agent a charge of 50 cents, and the tax is levied on $3, making the admission $3.60. I protest against this and propose that playgoers support the petition of the managers. The theatres have done a great deal to lighten our worries in war time. If this surtax is insisted on, there will be another nail in the coffin in which all gayety is to be buried. PLAYGOER.

Sinn Fein and the War.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

We have heard, and shall hear again, appeals of the Sinn Fein to the Peace Conference, and especially to Americans. There is just one question for Americans to put to the Sinn Fein. It is a very simple one: "What did you do during the great war?"

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I would like to go on record as offering a prediction that the Democratic Party will nominate Brand Whitlock as the next candidate for President. W. L. K.

EBERT TO THE GERMANS BACK FROM WAR.

"You can return with heads erect!"
So Ebert, to the German hosts.
Well beaten! Aye! your banners flecked
With guiltless blood, with swarming ghosts
Wailing about your ears, your name
Foul in all nostrils, greedy Night's
Deep maw full-glutted with the shame
Of all you fed her with, new blights
Of your devising, torturing flesh,
Your own and alien, cross-bedecked—
You can return with heads erect!

Though Michael, with the flail of thunder, thrash
The deadly harvest of the hate you sowed,
And winnow with the hurricane, to find
The sharpest gibe, the perfect, bitterest curse,
He shall not garner worse
Than this, from one of your own kind:
"You can return with heads erect!"

Just God! the German intellect!
Until the Day when battle-mold
Shall flower with slain; until forgotten pits
In field and town no more withhold
Their words; until, to Him that sits
As Judge above, shall rise the German name;
None shall more venomously hiss.
Upon that name than Ebert—German fame
Shall bear no darker smirch than this:
"You can return with heads erect!"

WILLIAM LAIRD.

LEAGUE OF ALLIES ENOUGH, SAYS HILL

Would Bar Germany from Partnership with Nations That Maintained the Law.

AGAINST A "SUPER-NATION"

Charles E. Hughes Attacks Growth of Bureaucracy at State Bar Association Meeting.

The New York State Bar Association began its forty-second annual meeting in the Meeting Room of the New York City Bar Association, 42 West Forty-fourth Street, yesterday afternoon, at which Charles E. Hughes, the retiring President, was the principal speaker. The annual address to the association was made at the evening session in the Grand Ballroom of the Astor by Dr. David Jayne Hill, former Ambassador to Germany. His topic was "Authority of International Law," and dealt largely with the League of Nations idea.

To be of value, he said, the league would have to be composed of treaty-keeping nations, which had proved their sense of honor in the past, and he opposed any scheme which would admit Germany to fellowship with the Allies.

"The authority of international law," said Dr. Hill, "rests on national character. We cannot change that by forming new partnerships, and particularly not by receiving into them a doubtful member, in the hope of rendering the defaulter and the embezzler an honest man by giving him an interest in a business for which we furnish most of the capital.

"I profoundly distrust the professions and the plausibilities of death-bed repentances, and also the improvements of society supposed to result from merely emotional impulses. If we are to build wisely, we shall build on the foundations of tested knowledge and experience. We shall put no trust in any 'scrap of paper,' no matter with what pious phraseology it may be inscribed, except in so far as we know that there are both strength and character behind it. We went into this war a free people. Let us come out of it a free people.

"Men talk glibly of world federation. What does it mean? It means, if it signifies anything, that this nation, with other nations, is to place itself under some kind of a central authority, with power to raise and expend taxes, to organize and command armies, to regulate the trade and commerce of the world, and upon occasion to declare war—powers which, under our national Constitution, the most far-seeing document of government ever written by the hand of man, are placed solely in the control of the responsible representatives of the people of the United States.

Our Free Institutions Adequate.

"Those powers will, I believe, never be transferred to a new nation, of which the United States would be only a parochial part; nor will they ever be subject to being overruled by the decisions of any association whatever, without the free consent of our own law-making bodies.

"We have, during the war, put to the test the strength of our free institutions, and we have found them adequate for war as well as for peace. They have been adequate, because we have never for a moment lost the conviction that we are a free people, and that we were acting in perfect freedom. Had the matter of our food been under the control of a supernational body, had our young men been ordered by an authority not American to leave their business and report for conscription to cross the sea and fight at the dictation and in the interest of a foreign people, had the occasion called for action that was in any degree doubtful to the American conscience, this people would not have made the sacrifices of life and treasure which they have gladly made with unreluctant consecration of mind and body.

"There is a limit to national, as there is to personal, responsibility. Nationally, that limit is defined by the maintenance and vindication of law. I fear the imperial sodality of great powers associated for any other purpose. No condominium has ever been freer from jealousies and friction. Even so trifling a partnership as the control of the Samoan Islands was a thorn in the side of three nations until it was dissolved. Every such condominium has ended either in quarrel or partition, or in both; and the net result is always merely deferred annexation. A partnership for equal economic opportunities among unequal nations offers the prospect of unexpected demands; which, if not granted, will lead to the accusation of bad faith.

"How, then, can we find a modus vivendi for sovereign States? How, indeed, if not in a united support of law, the recognition of their equal freedom, and their mutual obligations? Law does not require a renunciation of rights; it affirms, guarantees, and protects them. That is its very purpose and its whole significance.

"Let there be, then, a union for the maintenance of the law. Such a union now happily exists. It consists of the nations that have had the force and the courage to enter the war, in order to bring the lawbreakers to justice, and of no others. I say of no others, because a nation is of value in providing a real sanction to the authority of law only when it is ready to defend the law. A neutral nation at best only renders a passive respect to the authority of the Law of Nations. In the cause of equity it is not an asset, it is only a liability."

The Treaty Making Power.

Taking up the making of treaties, Dr. Hill said:

"Indeed, the making of treaties very narrowly escaped remaining under the Constitution, what it had been under the Confederation, an act intrusted to the legislative branch alone. It was only toward the end of the sessions that the previous method was modified.

"'It was evident,' says Ferrand, in his 'Framing of the Constitution,' 'that the convention was growing tired. The committee had recommended that the power of appointment and the making of treaties be taken from the Senate and vested in the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. With surprising unanimity and surprisingly little debate, he adds, 'these important changes were agreed to.'

"By this division of the process of treaty-making, the Executive was, in effect, charged with the duty of recommending legislation which he might find desirable and practicable, but upon which a truly legislative seal was to be placed only with the advice and consent of a lawmaking body.

"Regarding the motives for this decision, Alexander Hamilton wrote, in The Federalist: 'However proper and safe it may be in governments where the executive magistrate is an hereditary monarch, to commit to him the entire power of making treaties, it would be utterly unsafe and improper to intrust that power to an elective magistrate of four years' duration. * * * The history of human conduct does not warrant that exalted opinion of human virtue which would make it wise in a nation to commit interests of so delicate and momentous a kind as those which concern its intercourse with the rest of the world to the sole disposal of a magistrate created and circumstanced as would be the President of the United States.'

"'To have intrusted the power of making treaties to the Senate alone,' he continues, 'would have been to relinquish the benefits of the constitutional agency of the President in the conduct of foreign negotiations. * * * Though it would be imprudent to confide in him solely so important a trust, yet it cannot be doubted that his participation would materially add to the safety of the society. It must indeed be clear to a demonstration that the joint possession of the power in question, by the President and Senate, would afford a greater prospect of security than the separate possession of it by either of them.'

"The judgment of American statesmen and the results of experience have confirmed the view expressed by Hamilton. It has been the custom of the Executive, in matters of large import, to avail himself of 'the advice and consent of the Senate,' at all stages of negotiation; and, in fact, the need of negotiations on particular subjects has sometimes been first brought to the attention of the Executive by the legislative branch of the Government. Much of this exchange of views is not, however, a matter of record; for it has been in great part oral, and the nature of the questions under discussion often rendered these private conversations too delicate to be given publicity when opinion on all sides was still merely in a state of formation by the competent participants."

Hughes Attacks Bureaucracy.

Mr. Hughes, in his address in the afternoon, attacked the tendency of the Government to lodge large general powers in the hands of bureaus, which was resulting, he said, in placing the rights of men at the mercy of petty tyrants, who were able to enforce their decrees, good or bad, by threatening legal proceedings and unfavorable publicity against any who questioned or resisted a bureaucratic policy.

"In increasing measure," he said, "we are ruled not by Congress or by the Executive, not by State Legislatures or by Governors, but by department officials, whose personal will, whose favor or disfavor, measures for practical purposes the rights of American citizens. This condition is aggravated by the constant and necessary practice of giving to administrative order the sanction of the penal law.

"Disobedience to the bureaucrat is a crime and the citizen prefers to obey rather than to chance the disgrace of an indictment. For him due process of law is largely an unreality, for reputation is too dear to enable him to risk the displeasure of a bureau chief or even of a subordinate who can enforce his will by the threat of a criminal charge.

"There is not the slightest doubt that administrative agencies will have to be multiplied in order to meet the needs of public work and to enforce public rights which cannot be maintained without adequate administrative supervision. And wherever an adequate remedy is found through administrative discretion in applying rules, there is also an open door to serious abuses. Recognizing this danger, what can we do to minimize it?

"No relief can be found short of a sound public opinion with respect to administrative standards. It should be treated as axiomatic in a free Government that necessity is the only justification for the creation of administrative agencies which are virtually law-givers in their respective spheres. Each new proposal should show cause to a people instinct with the love of liberty.

Tribunals Multiplying Rapidly.

"We are at the threshold of the development of administrative law, and I believe that we shall find it increasingly necessary to separate administrators who judge—those who investigate and decide—from those who execute or prosecute. We are multiplying rapidly what are in fact tribunals of adjudication affecting most important rights. Their action upon evidence within their sphere is unreviewable; their findings of fact are final. This means that for the most part the citizen has no appeal of any kind from the decisions of the bureaus. The only safeguard is to be found in every possible guarantee of a fair hearing before those who have no interest to depart from judicial standards.

"In addition, the regularly constituted courts of justice, while recognizing their own proper sphere, and the necessity of the appropriate freedom for administrative agencies, should be keen to detect the stepping over the line of official authority. The most vicious wrong in democracy is the abuse of power—the betrayal of the people by their own agents, and the only protection from this evil, when the rights of persons and property are concerned, is to be found in courts of justice. We have, of course, a government of men—there is no other government—but we have a government of men whose duties are defined by law, and hence a government of law, and there never should be hesitancy to unmask the officer who usurps power.

"The pressure of administrative work must ultimately enforce the demand for expert administrators. The war has greatly helped in bringing to the aid of the Government, in its great need, men of skill and experience, whose aid was formerly less welcome. Ignorance supplied with the opportunities of tyranny provides a travesty of administration. Our efforts at social betterment through administrative plans are all in vain, if there is not a strong public demand for officials at once able, firm, and just."

John Lord O'Brian, who conducted most of the important prosecutions of the Department of Justice in alien enemy cases, who also spoke at the afternoon session, said:

"No other nation came through the struggle with so little disorder and with so little interference with the civil liberty of the individual. How much this was due to our remoteness from the fields of warfare, how much it was due to the instinctive habits of our people, and how much it was due to respect for positive law are now matters of conjecture. It is for the future to ascertain accurately the explanation; but no historical appraisement will leave out of its reckoning consideration of the attitude of Attorney General Gregory and his department."

The meeting will close with a dinner in the Astor tonight.

ART NOTES.

Drawings of Forain and Steinlen—Mary Prindeville's Paintings.

At the Arden Galleries until Jan. 28 the public has an opportunity to see some of the best drawings of Forain and Steinlen, those typically Parisian artists who have celebrated the manners and customs of the French capital for many years, and who, since the breaking out of the war, have loosed their remarkable talents in an unceasing bombardment of the enemy with satire, scorn, wit, rage, and merciless understanding.

The exhibition is retrospective, and we see how the caustic Forain could turn from recording the shoulders and eyes of the café and opera to registering the rebuke of the German officer to his men who have had a bad day's hunting and have brought down "not even a child!" We see how Steinlen could spend the wealth of his mental equipment on drawing cats, the temperamental cats of the Paris streets; upon celebrating the jaunty charms of Yvette Guilbert in a poster worthy of them at their best, from celebrating with equal ardor the industrious Paris workmen swarming to and from their work; and turn with a noble gesture to his war cartoons, the most impassioned, convincing, and artistically just that have come from France.

The drawings and lithographs in the exhibition come from the collection of Albert E. Gallatin, who has written for the catalogue a preface full of personal enthusiasm and sound criticism.

A pupil of Henry Golden Dearth and strongly influenced by Mr. Dearth's later manner, Mary Prindeville, whose pictures are on view until Jan. 25 at the Milch Galleries, is an artist to remember and watch with much confidence that her original talent will conquer acquired mannerisms. Even in those pictures containing most evidence that Mr. Dearth's passion for Oriental objects of art is shared by her she escapes somewhat from the mere scrupulous portraiture of Persian dishes and bibelots. Her flowers have been studied in the garden as well as in the painting room. And in her landscapes trees have character and little red houses are more than a patch of necessary color. Her pictures of "Esther," a negro woman of the paintable type, show still more of this research into nature. The plastic bronze form is carefully studied, and shows those potentialities of motion and change without which no suggestion of life can be gained. There is much that is good in all the pictures, but the good qualities fail to unite in one satisfying impression. They are lying about waiting to be made into an organic whole. That will come later.

HARBOR WORKERS SUBMIT WAGE SCALE

Unions Also Present Chart Purporting to Show Great Increase in Towing Rates.

CLASH OVER HYLAN LETTER

Capt. Maher Declares Quotations from Him in Mayor's Communication Were Untrue.

Counsel for the marine unions which tied up harbor traffic three days last week, submitted a proposed wage scale yesterday to the subcommittee of the National War Labor Board taking evidence in the controversy with the boat owners. The meeting at the City Hall was so marked by clashes of lawyers and witnesses that at the noon recess C. E. Michael, the Acting Chairman, warned both sides to forego unkind remarks.

The unions introduced a chart purporting to show that towing rates in this port had been increased from 250 to 400 per cent. since March, 1917, a few weeks before this country entered the war. Paul Bonynge, counsel for the Red Star Towing and Transportation Company, opposed the filing of the chart, because, he said, he doubted its accuracy. He was overruled and instructed to bring evidence to show that the figures were incorrect.

In his argument on the admission of this chart Frank P. Walsh, counsel for the Marine Affiliation, declared that it showed "a terrible case of profiteering against the Government" and that it was "unconscionable and unmoral" for the boat owners "to come here to try to beat down the wages of the men."

One of the many clashes came with the introduction of Mayor Hylan's letter to Ernest Bohm, Secretary of the Central Federated Union, in which the Mayor criticised James A. Maher, Vice President of the Marine Affiliation, for his alleged assertion during the strike that he did "not care how much suffering or inconvenience may come to anybody" and that "the more inconvenience and the more hardship there is inflicted on the people the better will be our chance of winning."

Captain Maher, who was on the stand, declared that "many statements in that letter are not true." He added that he had no conference with the Mayor, who had received his information "second-hand" from the Corporation Counsel, who had "twisted the facts to suit his purpose." The charge that he had opposed a humane course in the strike the witness declared to be "untrue."

Intimations of conspiracy on the part of the boat owners were made by counsel and witnesses for the union in referring to the rise in towing rates, and counsel for the Red Star Towing Company questioned Captain Maher upon the affairs of the Marine Affiliation and the seven unions composing the affiliation. At first he declined to answer questions as to the income of the affiliation, but at the afternoon session withdrew his refusal and said the only income of the affiliation came from its seven units.

In the cross-examination Mr. Bonynge elicited from Captain Maher that he was employed by the Hamburg-American Line as a tug Captain about 1904, but left that company soon after and was re-employed in October, 1914. The witness said he left the German company in January, 1917, three months before this country entered the war, and became a Captain for the Ocean Steamship Company, an American line. At this point counsel engaged in a long argument upon the admission of New Jersey court records purporting to show that Captain Maher on March 27, 1916, had pleaded non vult in the Hudson County Court of Quarter Sessions to the charge of making false election reports in the primaries and that a fine of $500 had been imposed. Official copies of other court documents were offered to show that Captain Maher had been convicted of a similar offense in 1914, but the board ruled that "this and all similar evidence shall be excluded."

When Captain Maher presented the demand for the basic eight-hour day, counsel for the boat owners asked whether the unions had any plan for supplying the extra crews necessary if boats were to be operated continuously. Captain Maher said he knew of 400 or 500 pilots who had left the service because of wages and working conditions. Pressed for the names of these men, he said he would supply them if the eight-hour day should be adopted. The wage scale proposed by the unions in comparison to that now prevailing under the award made by the New York Harbor Wage Adjustment Board last July follows:

	Present Monthly Scale.	Proposed Scale.
Captains	$140-$160	$225.00
Pilot or mate required to navigate	140	200.00
Mate on transport tug	115	150.00
Mate on freight or passenger boat, (not required to navigate)	115	150.00
Ferry Quartermaster	95	150.00
Chief engineers	130-150	225.00
Assistant engineer	120-140	200.00
Oilers	80	146.00
Firemen (1)	80	146.00
Firemen (2)	75	135.00
First deckhand	80	132.50
Second deckhand	75	127.50
Cooks	77	[illegible]
Floatmen	75	130.00

Separate schedules giving the demands of the Lighter Captains' Union were filed. They follow:

	Present Daily Wage	Proposed Wage.
Captains, (covered barges)	$3.50	$5.00
Lighters, with 10-ton hoisting gear	3.75	6.00
Lighters, 10 tons and over	4.00	6.00

All the demands include the eight-hour day, with time and one-half for overtime, Sundays and holidays, even if the worker has taken another rest day in lieu of Sunday to suit the convenience of the owner. The hearing will be resumed in the Board of Estimate room in the City Hall at 10 o'clock this morning.

PLEA FOR FREE LIGHTERAGE

Shippers Protest to Railways Against Present Charges.

A meeting of persons interested in the restoration of free lighterage in the Port of New York, as it existed before the war, was held at the Chamber of Commerce yesterday. Freight for New York was formerly delivered with lighterage included in the freight charges. Since the United States became a belligerent the owners of lighters have charged 3 cents a hundred pounds for bringing freight from New Jersey, South Brooklyn, or Queens piers to Manhattan.

The meeting was attended by representatives of the Chamber of Commerce, the Merchants' Association, the Chamber of Commerce of Queens, the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce, and the Produce Exchange. Alfred E. Marling, President of the Chamber, presided, and speeches were made by Julius Henry Cohen, counsel to the chamber; John F. Wallace, ex-Dock Commissioner Calvin Tomkins and others. Mr. Tomkins wanted the meeting to go on record as favoring a vehicular tunnel under the East River, but the suggestion was not approved. After some further discussion the following resolutions, offered by Harry A. Hanbury of the Morse Dry Dock and Shipbuilding Company, were adopted:

> Resolved, That this conference of merchants, manufacturers, and shippers earnestly request the United States Railroad Administration to restore, at the Port of New York, the lighterage service, guaranteed under existing tariffs, and that a committee of five be appointed to make earnest representation to the proper Government and railroad authorities in this matter; and be it further
> Resolved, That the committee present a copy of these resolutions to the several chambers of commerce and trade organizations in Greater New York and ask their co-operation in securing an immediate restoration of lighterage service.

A committee will be appointed to go to Washington to do what is possible to carry out the mandate of the resolutions.

72 PICTURES FOR $25,420

Cazin's "Elsinore" Fetches $1,625 and Cot's "The Storm" and "Springtime" $775 Each.

Modern paintings, the collection of the late John W. Sterling, sold by order of his executors at the Hotel Plaza last evening, under the auspices of the American Art Association, Thomas E. Kirby, auctioneer, brought $25,420 for the seventy-two numbers.

A Schrier, "Arabian Horsemen," No. 65, of an agreeable size, 19 by 32 inches, brought the highest price of the evening, going to Clapp & Graham for $5,500. A Ziem, "Venice," No. 64, a fête day on the canal, the Doge's Palace and the Campanile seen in the distance, brought the second highest price, $2,500, going to Lorenz, agent. A Cazin, No. 44, "Elsinore," a limpid stream, a garden wall, a narrow road, poplars, went to the Holland Galleries for $1,625.

A couple of interesting pictures of the collection were Nos. 45 and 46, "The Storm" and "Springtime," by Pierre Auguste Cot. They are the original studies of the larger paintings, the first in the Metropolitan Museum of Art and the second in the Brooklyn Museum. They are familiar pictures, much reproduced. That of the Metropolitan shows a dark-haired youth and a blond maiden, the latter robed in thin gauze, running from a storm, their arms raised, holding over their heads a piece of drapery as a protection. The Brooklyn picture shows the same youth and maiden in a swing. The originals are 2?, by 16 inches. They went last night to Herbert Day for $775 each. WEDS COUNT KORZYBSKI.

Mira Edgerly, American Artist, Marries Polish Soldier.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—Count Alfred de Skarbek Korzybski, Polish soldier, and Mira Edgerly, American artist, were married this morning in the chambers of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

Mira Edgerly is a portrait painter on ivory. Among her sitters in this country and abroad have been the late Duchess of Connaught, Princess Patricia of Connaught, Mrs. James A. Burden, the Duchess of Hamilton, Mrs. Lydig Hoyt, Mrs. Oliver Iselin, Mrs. John Sanford, Mrs. Willard Straight and Mrs. Vanderbilt Webb.

Count Korzybski is the present head of an ancient Polish family with huge estates just out of Warsaw. At the opening of the war he enlisted with the Russian Army and was sent immediately to the front. With him he took his favorite horse, a white Arabian. Shortly afterward, during a heavy barrage fire, the Count in an effort to save the valued animal slipped over a steep incline, horse and rider plunging into a rocky ravine. After his recovery from the fall it was discovered that to return to active service would be impossible, and he was sent to Petrograd to serve on the staff of Grand Duke Nicholas.

In 1916 Count Korzybski was sent to Canada as an expert on ammunition and later to the United States as recruiting officer for the Polish Army. At present he is in Washington with a number of military inventions.

The Count and his wife expect to return to Poland within a few months to enlist in the reconstruction work in that country.

HEAR TUMULTY MAY RUN.

Rumored That President's Secretary May Stand for Jersey Governor.

The report has gained currency that Joseph P. Tumulty, secretary to the President, will soon announce his candidacy for Governor of New Jersey, but it has been impossible to have the report confirmed or to draw comment from Democratic politicians. The two candidates who are being considered are Senator Edwards and Congressman Thomas J. Scully of South Amboy, and it is the prevailing opinion that only in case the fight between them becomes close would Mr. Tumulty be considered as a compromise. Senator Edwards, when questioned regarding the candidacy of the President's secretary, would do no more than express high admiration for him, while ex-Governor James F. Fielder thought he would be a strong candidate in Hudson County and probably in Essex.

A committee will wait on ex-State Senator Everett Colby tomorrow to urge him to run for Governor on the Republican ticket. Major Colby, when he heard it yesterday, expressed willingness to accept the nomination if the reason for urging him was his attitude toward labor and other legislation.

PROTEST MILWAUKEE MAYOR

Officers Ask Him Not to Head Committee to Receive Troops.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Jan. 17.—A committee of army officers today requested Mayor D. W. Hoan to withdraw from the Chairmanship of the committee which will have charge of a reception tomorrow night for returned soldiers, but the Mayor declined to resign.

The Mayor was told that the feeling that had arisen since he presided over a Socialist mass meeting Sunday night which indorsed the actions of Victor Berger and others, convicted of violating the Espionage act, would make it impossible for him to welcome American soldiers.

The committee of officers left the Mayor's office declaring that if the Mayor refused to withdraw there would be no violence, but "the Mayor would not speak."

EVOLVES NEW THEORIES.

Tesla Says Wireless Waves Pass Through the Earth, Not the Air.

The forthcoming issue of The Electrical Experimenter will contain an article by Nikola Tesla, inventor, in which he takes issue with the generally accepted theories of the moon's axial rotation, the pointed lightning rod, and the passage of wireless messages through the air.

Dr. Tesla says that "the moon does rotate, not on its own, but about an axis passing through the centre of the earth, the true and only one." He says that wireless messages pass directly through the earth itself, instead of following the earth's curvature through the air, between stations of any great distance apart. He believes that some day there will be a great station that will keep the earth charged with just enough electricity to make wireless sending very simple. Disagreeing with Franklin that the pointed lightning rod makes surrounding air attractive to heavenly bolts, Dr. Tesla says that he has invented a rod with rounded surface which repels lightning.

Colonel House Sitting Up.

It is believed that the Colonel's physicians, as a precautionary measure, will forbid his attendance at the opening of the Peace Conference.

CABINET ACTION IN SPANISH CRISIS

Government Issues a Decree Suspending Guarantees in Barcelona Province.

IN FEAR OF BOLSHEVISM

Premier Would Not Be Surprised at Anything Happening in the Disturbed Area.

LONDON, Jan. 17.—The Spanish Government has published a decree suspending constitutional guarantees in the province of Barcelona, according to a wireless dispatch from Madrid.

BARCELONA, Jan. 17.—Today's newspapers express the belief that the suspension of constitutional guarantees was was due to the fear that the Syndicalist Bolshevist movement was likely to culminate in the strike of 300,000 men.

MADRID, Jan. 17, (Associated Press.)—Premier Romanones, after a meeting of the Spanish Cabinet today, told the newspaper correspondents that he would not be surprised at anything which would happen in Barcelona. The Cabinet, he said, had discussed the situation in Barcelona, which was quite abnormal.

Count Romanones informed the Cabinet that the trouble at Barcelona arose from the hostility of the Nationalists to the military and the latter's refusal to tolerate Nationalist disturbances. He said he had authorized the Captain General of Barcelona to take measures to prevent collisions, because such encounters would be prejudicial in the highest degree to a solution of the Catalonian problem. The Ministers accorded the Premier a vote of confidence.

Barcelona and the province of which it is the capital have been the centre of recent agitation in favor of autonomy for Catalonia. After disturbances in Barcelona and other parts of Catalonia early in December, the Spanish Government offered to submit the demands of Catalonia to a Parliamentary committee. A Madrid dispatch on Jan. 4 reported that a commission of political leaders of Spain had decided in favor o fautonomy for Catalonia, and it was expected that the matter would be brought before the Spanish Parliament when it resumed its sessions on Jan. 20.

Chapin Taken to Sing Sing.

Charles E. Chapin, the former city editor of The Evening World, who was sentenced on Tuesday to an indeterminate term of twenty years to life on his plea of guilty to the murder of his wife, Nellie Beebe Chapin, was taken to Sing Sing Prison yesterday by Sheriff Knott. Should Chapin survive the minimum of his sentence and be released he would then be more than 80 years old, as his age was recorded as 60 years when he was arraigned before Justice Weeks in the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court. Chapin's mental condition, which was the subject of an inquiry by a commission in lunacy, had improved during his recent days in the Tombs, but it was said that he would probably be placed in the Sing Sing Prison hospital for several days for a study of his condition and to determine what work he is fitted to do.

Open Letter to Chairman Will H. Hays

Jan. 16, 1919.

MR. WILL H. HAYS,
Chairman, National Republican Committee,
923 Woodward Building, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir:

As a political party of women voters organized to fight with our ballots the twin dangers of woman suffrage and radicalism, we beg to ask what the National Republican Committee expects to gain at the hands of the people by the contradictory resolutions passed on January 10, in favor of the Federal Suffrage Amendment and against Socialism and Bolshevism?

Surely you are aware that Socialist and Bolshevist propagandists from Petrograd to New York are preaching woman suffrage, that Morris Hillquit and the Socialists claim full credit for the suffrage victory in New York State, and that they are working ceaselessly, solidly backed by the disloyal press, to get the political weapon—the ballot—in the hands of women. How do you propose to protect our institutions if you do not safeguard the polls?

It is the Socialist party that profits by women's votes. It is the radical women who are fighting to get to the polls. The conservative women are reluctant voters. In backing woman suffrage you are playing into the hands of the Socialists. You must know that with women voting in New York, Republicans and Democrats were forced to combine in the last election in four congressional districts as the only means of protecting Congress from four Socialist members from Manhattan. While the Republican and Democratic vote was increased only 30% with women voting in New York State, the Socialist vote increased 133%, the Socialist candidate for Governor polling 121,705 votes in 1918 with women voting, as against 52,550 in 1916 without woman suffrage.

By what authority do you pledge the Republican Party to the Federal Suffrage Amendment?

There has been no National Party Convention since 1916, and it then declared for settlement by state, not national, action. It was not the Party, but the Republican candidate himself that fastened the millstone of the Federal Amendment about his own neck. It is amazing that any Republican with a memory two years old, and facing another Presidential campaign, should repeat Judge Hughes' blunder.

May we ask if the so-called Women's Republican National Committee is really a Republican Committee or a suffrage committee?

It is reported that it "plans to take up active work for the immediate passage of the Federal Suffrage Amendment by the Senate" (Suffragist, Jan. 4, 1919). This indicates that your "Women's Committee" will use the machinery (and funds) of the Republican Party as a vehicle to further votes for women, and also that your party will get the same so-called "support" from suffragists that Judge Hughes got in 1916 after his endorsement of the Amendment. Having proclaimed Judge Hughes' surrender, and featured him on the front page of their official organ wearing a votes-for-women sash, and featured in another issue the Republican elephant ridden by a woman, and waving a National Woman Suffrage banner in his trunk, suffragists appear to have abandoned the Republican candidate and his party.

These women wage only wrecking campaigns—campaigns of elimination. A candidate or party that capitulates to them merely becomes a surrendered enemy. They threaten and attack their foes and do not or cannot support their friends and victims.

The chief campaign speaker in the double-suffrage states during the last Presidential campaign took this message to the women voters:

"Now let us not be misunderstood. We are not pro-Hughes, pro-Republican, pro-Socialist, or pro-Prohibition. We are simply pro-Woman. . . . We are appealing to those women who have obtained the franchise and are asking them to hold their votes as a whip over all parties."

After election the official organ of their party stated editorially:

"We were not concerned with the result of the election. Ours was a campaign in which it made no difference who was elected. We did not endorse any candidate. We did not care who won. . . . We were simply pro-Woman. . . . What we did try to do was to try to organize a protest vote against Mr. Wilson's attitude toward woman suffrage." (Suffragist, Nov. 11, 1916.)

You will recall the intensive campaign suffragists waged in double-suffrage states against President Wilson (who then stood like a rock against the amendment.) In spite of their wrecking campaign, every state, except Oregon, where women had full suffrage was carried by Mr. Wilson.

We are amazed that as Chairman of the National Republican Committee and responsible for the outcome of the campaign that you should connive at the use of the Republican Party as a suffrage tool.

You remember that it was so used by Governor Whitman in New York in 1917. The New York Sun, a Republican paper, described the New York Legislature and Governor Whitman as "roped, thrown and tied by the suffs." When Governor Whitman came before the men and women voters for re-election in November, he ran 180,000 behind his ticket upstate, and polled 16,000 fewer votes in New York City with women voting than in 1916 from men alone.

Recent elections, both National and State, prove one of two things: Either, suffragists cannot deliver their "Woman's Vote," or, if they do, it is too small to count in the whole woman electorate.

If suffragists are able to extend the field of their operations, and to "rope, throw and tie" the Republican Party throughout the country, its candidates may expect the fate of Judge Hughes and Governor Whitman.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Turn Weak on Scattered Selling with Rails Steadier Than Others.

The weakness which developed among stocks yesterday caused a renewal of study of market conditions, not so much because of the extent of the declines as by reason of the fact that a recession had not been forecast by developments the day before. In some respects transactions bore the earmarks of bear pressure, coupled with scattered liquidation of speculative accounts. The quality of business on the Stock Exchange in the first half hour indicated little if any change from the irregular tendency previously noted, but this indifferent sort of trading became altered rather quickly into a retreating movement of industrial stocks which left prices at the end of the session from 1 to more than 8 points lower, with larger declines in some cases. The decline of 2 points in Consolidated Gas was chiefly explainable by the suit to annul the 80-cent gas provision on the ground that sufficient income was not obtainable under the current rate. Some of the steel and equipment issues appeared to be depressed by discussion of a slackening in demand for particular products, a discussion not unconnected with an impression obtained from Washington dispatches that railroad improvements and betterments would probably be curtailed in the near future.

Considered broadly, traders in securities, and investors as well, found considerable to ponder over in the day's news and rumors. The telegram from Washington supplied much of the material. A deduction to be made from the statement that less than half the $1,218,000,000 worth of railroad improvement had been completed was that the carriers were not hurrying through the program. Railway managers have objected to a large amount of contemplated expenditures, now that the war emergency is passed. One controversy between a railroad receiver and the Railroad Administration over an allotment of new equipment has occurred, and it is expected in some quarters that differences of opinion over outlay for betterments will come to light shortly. The revolving fund of $500,000,000 provided for the conduct of the railways under Government supervision is not far from exhaustion, and with a heavy deficit looming up for the year it was not extraordinary that talk of a movement on the part of the Railroad Administration for another increase in freight rates was heard. It may have been that the possibility of an increased income worked to stabilize railroad stocks, as they shared only to a moderate degree in the day's decline.

The mercantile agencies report reduced operations during the week at many manufacturing centres, with the offsetting favorable comment that price reductions in certain lines have gone far enough among basic commodities to arouse hopes of an early revival of operations. A slowing down of mills and factories means, of course, less employment for labor, and it is to be hoped that a renewal of buying will appear before the forces of labor are augmented largely by returning soldiers. The current gradual expansion of export inquiries is encouraging, a movement which may gain force quickly after the efforts of representatives of manufacturing interests who are going abroad are more clearly defined.

The state of the money market continues to be favorable to the output of new securities, and active work on a number of corporation issues, running to a sizable total, is being done. The feeling seems to be rather general among bankers that needed financing may safely be carried out up to March 1, or a little later, without impairing the amount of funds necessary to put through the Victory Loan. There is reason to believe that loans for foreign Governments running well into the tens of millions will be arranged for in the next two months.

Reserve Bank Force Increases.

The number of employes in the local Federal Reserve Bank increased in the last year from 1,000 to 2,000, it was said yesterday, and while the quarters of the bank in the Equitable Building were large enough when the bank first opened they were considerably crowded now. No plans for the bank's new quarters are in sight at the present time and it is understood that nothing will be done in the way of a new building until prices for building materials become more stable.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

United Kingdom Note Payment.

At the office of J. P. Morgan & Co. it was said yesterday that the unconverted balance of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland 5½ per cent. notes, maturing Feb. 1, would be paid off in cash. At the present rate of conversions into the twenty-year British Government 5½ per cent. bond issue, it is expected that a comparatively small amount of the notes will be left outstanding at the due date.

Another Young Bank President.

Bank Presidents are growing younger. H. C. Richard, who is 33 years old, was elected President of the State Bank yesterday, to succeed his father, O. L. Richard, who was head of the bank for twenty-nine years. The new President is a year younger than Raymond E. Jones, who heads the Merchants' National Bank. Directors of the State Bank elected Albert I. Voorhis as Vice President, to succeed Arnold Kohn, who retired. John Kneisel was appointed to Mr. Voorhis's place as cashier.

Protecting Liberty Bond Sellers.

The Stock Exchange has set out to impress upon owners of Liberty bonds the fact that accumulated interest should be taken into account when a bond is sold. The Exchange authorities are persuaded that the addition of interest to the quoted price, while generally understood among bond dealers, is not broadly known among new investors in funded securities, particularly Government bonds. Complaints have come to the Exchange that unscrupulous buyers of Liberty bonds have frequently, by offering a little more than the market price, been able to profit substantially on the interest at the expense of the seller.

Crucible Steel's Operations.

The decline of 3¼ points in Crucible Steel yesterday appeared to be connected with information of reduced operations of the company. The Norwalk (Ohio) and Midland plant, near Pittsburgh, were reported to be operating at no more than 60 per cent. of capacity, with indications that other plants would shortly slow down. Cancellation of war orders is said to be the chief cause.

Railway Improvements Restricted.

Information from railroad quarters goes to show that many improvements planned by the Railroad Administration have been halted. The Pennsylvania Railroad, it is understood, has stopped work which in preliminary estimates called for the outlay of about $10,000,000. The Government apparently has decided to reduce expenses which were originally contemplated under the war emergency and are not now believed to be essential, in view of current high costs.

Cuba Cane Financing.

After a day of rumors, it was said last night in authoritative quarters that Directors of the Cuba Cane Sugar Corporation had met and decided to finance the company's floating debt of approximately $12,000,000 through the authorization and subsequent issuance and sale of a substantial amount of long-term bonds. This means that the company will have to create a mortgage and that an actual offering of the bonds will not be made until the mortgage is authorized by the stockholders. A Director of the company denied the rumor that between the time of the authorization and offering of bonds there would be a short-term note floated.

Yesterday's Selling.

The selling pressure which developed in the early trading yesterday in the stock market was received by the Street as a bona fide bear raid before the movement had obtained its full momentum. One large operator whose market actions are usually spectacular was reported to have sold more than 50,000 shares of stock, which were distributed generally but concentrated for a part of the issues which have recently moved forward. Another interpretation of the early selling pressure was found in the rumor that brokers have been warned about their loans and were selling to even up.

THE CONDITION OF TRADE.

Commenting on the condition of business in the last week, Dun's Review says that buyers are still disposed to purchase so as to meet only their current requirements until the various markets are readjusted to a less inflated position. The review says in part:

The existing irregularities and uncertainties in business, sharply defined in leading branches, are a natural concomitant of the economic transition which is now in progress. That in some directions the lull in activities has become more conspicuous, especially in the larger industrial centres, is a not unforeseen occurrence, but is only what was anticipated with the war's ending relaxing the great pressure on both producing and distributing facilities.

With many Government contracts already canceled, and others steadily expiring, there has not yet appeared a sufficiently broad development of strictly commercial demands to act as a full offset, and various manufacturing establishments are running under reduced capacity, with idle machinery and labor resulting. The present check, however, is not a sign that important requirements are absent, or that faith in the future is lacking, but is chiefly the outgrowth of buyers' disposition to await more favorable prices and to limit operations mainly to immediate needs while the markets are being readjusted to a less inflated position.

Bradstreet's says:

Wholesale and jobbing trade is quiet, but probably no more so than a week ago, there being rather more life at some large primary markets, balanced by a slowing down movement West and South. There is more talk of going slow at the latter centres and of country buyers ordering simply necessities and staples, but it is notable that retail trade, despite very mild mid-Winter weather, is fully as active as last week, and collections, except at Southern points where cotton holding affects settlements, are nearly as good as shown in last week's exceptionally fine report.

SEEK AID IN PARIS FOR EVILS IN MEXICO

National Association Wants Action Taken to Establish the Rights of Foreigners.

TO SEND SPOKESMEN OVER

England, France, and Canada Also to Send Delegations Who Seek Settlement of Mexican Difficulties.

The National Association for the Protection of American Rights in Mexico, an outgrowth of the Association of Producers of Oil in Mexico, is planning to send representatives to Paris while the Peace Convention is in session, who will ask that the rights of foreigners in Mexico be firmly established by international agreement and that protection be arranged. While definite plans have not as yet been fully worked out, it is understood that the delegation will include from six to ten men and that there may be an additional representation to set forth the grievances of the oil producers. These delegations will carry full data as to conditions in Mexico, and hope that they will be called before the Peace Convention.

Similar organizations in Canada, France, and England are forming, and it is expected will co-operate with the delegations from this country. Canada's organization is further advanced than those of France or England, and it is believed it will shortly appoint its delegation. Additional support for a settlement of Mexican affairs will be given by more than 100,000 Mexicans in this country, most of whom are in Texas. The majority are Mexicans who have been forced to leave their country, who will now ask that the Peace Convention give heed to the turmoil in the republic and arrange a settlement which will permit of their repatriation. Word of the proposed concerted action looking toward a return to normal conditions in Mexico came yesterday from Pittsburgh, where there are large interests identified with Mexican oil lands.

The National Association for the Protection of American Rights in Mexico it is said will include practically all of the American interests which have had difficulties in Mexico. Among them are two Rockefeller companies, the chief being the Standard Oil of New Jersey and the other a rubber company. Others are the American Smelting and Refining Company, the Mexican Petroleum Company, the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, and in addition, cattle men, cotton growers and allied interests.

It is estimated that the foreign interests in Mexico represent a capital investment of $2,500,000,000. Of this amount about $1,000,000,000 has come from American sources, $700,000,000 from England, $500,000,000 from France, and about $300,000,000 from Canada. The British capital is invested in mining railroads, banks, and oil lands. Next to the United States, England through the Pierson interests is the largest holder of Mexican oil properties.

For a number of years conditions have been such in Mexico that property rights and life itself were in danger. The most recent difficulty has come about with the endeavor of the Mexican Government to take over as its own all the subsoil rights in Mexico. This was attempted under a clause of the new Mexican constitution which asserts that all of these properties are inherently owned by the Government, and therefore could not be sold. This action has been described as confiscatory by both the mining and oil interests and has been the basis for two protests which have been sent to the Carranza Government by the State Department. Great Britain has also entered a protest, but thus far the Mexican Government has given small heed. There has been no recession from the original statement of possession, but as yet the notes have served to halt confiscatory proceedings.

BUTTER AND EGG MARKET.

BUTTER.—Receipts yesterday, 5,962 packages. Market about 1c lower on nearly all grades of creamery, and at the decline the feeling is still quite unsettled. Buyers are taking hold very slowly and there is pressure to sell. Creamery, higher than extras, a lb., 65½@66c; extras 92 score, 64½@65c; firsts, 88 to 91 score, 62½@64c; seconds, 83 to 87 score, 59@62c; lower grades, 54@58c; unsalted, higher than extras, 67½@68c; extras, 66½@67c; firsts, 63½@66c; seconds, 60@63c; State dairy tubs, finest, 63@64c; good to prime, 60@62c; common to fair, 52@59c; renovated extras, 53@54c; firsts, 51@52c; lower grades, 44@48c; imitation creamery, firsts, 47½@48½c; ladles, current make, firsts, 45½@46½c; seconds, 44c; lower grades, 42@43½c; packing stock, current make, No. 1, 44c; No. 2, 42½@43c; lower grades, 37@42c.

EGGS.—10,551 cases. The market opened weak with a number of offerings at 61c. These were taken, however, and later higher bids were made, with sales generally 61¼@62c., two or three lots of Northern eggs being taken up to 62½c for firsts. The market is closing unsettled and irregular, trade from store is moderate and there is enough stock available at 61½@62c for firsts to supply urgent needs, although most of the supply here is held for higher prices. Nearby white eggs have been in somewhat lighter receipt during the last day or two. Demand is a little better and stock is cleaning up in better shape. The market closes firm, but most receivers report no advance in price, although some are sending a little more than top figures for strictly fancy, large henery stock. Fresh gathered, extras, a dozen, 64@64½c; extra firsts, 63@63½c; firsts, 61½@62c; seconds and poorer, 58@60c; dirties, No. 1, 56@57c; No. 2 and poorer, 53@55c; checks, good to choice, dry, 49@50c; undergrades, 43@46c; refrigerator, 48@53c; State, Pennsylvania, and nearby Western, hennery whites, fine to fancy, 68@70c; ordinary to prime, 62@67c; gathered whites, ordinary to fine, 62@68c; pullet whites, 61@62c; Pacific Coast whites, extras, 68c; lower grades, 62@66c; Western and Southern, gathered whites, 62@65c; State, Pennsylvania and nearby, hennery browns, 67@68c; gathered brown and mixed colors, 62@64½c.

COTTON PRICES REACT ON STEADY SELLING

Maximum Decline From 70 to 75 Points in Sympathy with Security Weakness.

There was an irregular and unsettled tone to the cotton market yesterday, more or less in line with the weak securities markets. The pressure in the cotton market was mainly attributed to the selling by Liverpool interests, with old longs as an additional stimulus in the liquidation. Opening prices ranged from 10 points on January to 25 to 35 points on the rest of the list, below Thursday's closing quotations, with a later broadening in the reaction to a maximum decline of 70 to 75 points on the general list, October excepted, which was off 45 points. Aside from the depressing influence of weak Liverpool cables, which revealed losses of 25 to 50 points on the general list for the day, the decline was helped by heavy selling by traders who were active in Thursday's market in covering short commitments, and by fresh Southern selling, principally from New Orleans. At the low prices of the day January was selling at 25.60c.; March, 24.51c.; May, 23.08c.; July, 22.95c., and October of this crop, 20c. The selling seemed to have spent itself when these levels were reached, and on a moderate amount of fresh buying, coupled with a renewed covering of shorts, the market rallied to within 10 and 20 points of the preceding day's closing. The last hour's trading was alternately weak on fresh selling and strong on covering by the shorts, who very discreetly dropped out when the bulge came to an end by the ready absorption of the staple as offered.

Clearances for the day of 25,195 bales were the largest for the week. Galveston sent out 10,587 bales and Mobile 9,536 bales of this total. For the week exports amounted to 79,168 bales.

CONFEREES AT ODDS OVER PROFITS TAXES

Kitchin and His Associates Unwilling to Surrender Demand for Higher Imposts.

FLOODED WITH PROTESTS

Senators Think Outcry Over Proposed Tax on Theatre Tickets Is Justified.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—The Senate and House conferees reached a deadlock today in the debate on war profits taxes and adjourned at noon without having come to any agreement on the more important issues involved in the Senate amendments, which call for radical reductions. It is still believed that a compromise will have to be effected by rewriting some of the amendments, as Representative Kitchin and other House conferees are unwilling to make a complete surrender. The conferences will be resumed tomorrow, when new proposals will be made by both sides, it is understood.

The wide growth of the movement to bring about a reduction of the tax on admissions to theatres and other places of amusement, and the fact that members of the conference were flooded with protests against the increases proposed, brought forward another bone of contention which may result in protracted debate. As far as could be learned, the House conferees are still firm in their stand that the tax of 20 per cent. on theatre tickets costing more than 30 cents and 25 per cent. on boxes at theatre or opera are not excessive.

The theatrical managers and the theatregoing public who have leveled their guns at the Senate conferees who amended the original bill to cut the 20 per cent. tax in half, and then agreed to rewrite the higher tax suggested by the House Ways and Means Committee into the bill, have been referred to Representative Kitchin, leader of the House conferees, and his followers.

The point is being emphasized by the protestants that the tax not only threatens the successful operation of the theatres, but hits the pocketbooks of millions of citizens in all walks of life. The adoption of the House suggestions, which has now been accepted tentatively by the conferees, will mean that the price of tickets in the orchestra pits of most theatres will jump to $2.40, an increase of 40 cents over the prewar price, and 20 cents more than is paid by the theatregoer under the provisions of the present revenue law. The theatre managers are arguing that this will drive thousands of people away from their theatres and that the public will be called upon to pay an unfair premium on necessary recreation or abandon theatregoing.

The Senate conferees, it is understood, are practically unanimous in the belief. At the same time, however, the attitude of the House conferees for the higher tax is so firm that there seems little likelihood of bringing about a change of heart. The Senate conferees therefore realize that no headway in arriving at a completed bill can be hoped for unless a spirit of compromise is shown in some direction.

It is indicated that there may be further discussion of the theatre tax before the final draft of the conference report is adopted. Individual members also may give hearings to those who have protests to lodge against what they hold to be unjust decisions.

The conferees would make no comment for publication today concerning the progress being made in arriving at an agreement on the war and excess profits taxes. It is understood, however, that no great headway was made, and that the big principles involved were left unsettled. Mr. Kitchin, it is understood, is firmly of the opinion that corporations which made large sums out of the war will escape too lightly, if all the Senate amendments to the original House bill are granted, and has so far been unwilling to give ground on a number of points.

The necessity of completing the conference report, however, has become so pressing and there are so many other questions of vital importance to be decided upon that it is possible that a compromise on the war profits taxes will be reached tomorrow or Monday.

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE

Prices at the close of a fairly active market on the Consolidated Stock Exchange were steady, but represented losses of from 1 to more than 3 points in the active list. The market made but a fractional recovery from the heavy liquidation of the forenoon, and the latter half of the session found trading activity lessened and price fluctuations unimportant.

STATES FIGHT RISE IN UTILITIES RATES

Several Hold Up Federal Orders Affecting Telephone and Express Charges.

WASHINGTON OFFICIALS FIRM

Say Higher Rates in Carrying Business Will Be Collected, Despite Opposition to Schedules.

BOSTON, Jan. 17.—The Public Service Commission announced at a hearing today that the new Federal schedule of telephone rates, due to become operative on Jan. 21, would not be put into effect in Massachusetts until the hearings on the proposed changes had been completed.

The schedule was defended by M. B. Jones, Vice President of the New England Telephone and Telegraph Company, who appeared for the Government.

The hearing was adjourned until Jan. 30.

LANSING, Mich., Jan. 17.—The State Railroad Commission today announced that it had declined to give immediate approval to new telephone rates in Michigan as provided for in an order of Postmaster General Burleson.

The commission held that the companies concerned, including the Bell system, have neither advertised the proposed new rates sufficiently nor published their application for hearing as required by the Michigan law.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Jan. 17.—An order suspending for five months the enforcement of the telephone rates, which would have become effective in Illinois Jan. 21, under a ruling of Postmaster General Burleson, was entered by the Illinois Public Utilities Commission today.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 17.—The Florida Railroad Commission will make application in the courts for an injunction to restrain the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company from putting into effect rates for long-distance telephone calls ordered recently by Postmaster General Burleson to become effective Jan. 21.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Jan. 17.—The Ohio Public Utilities Commission will fight in the courts any attempt of the Federal railroad officials to override the action of the State Commission today in refusing to approve zone express rates ordered by the Director General of Railroads. Chairman C. C. Marshall announced today after being advised that the Railroad Administration had declared it would not recognize the action of the State Commission.

The commission yesterday rejected Postmaster General Burleson's schedule for long distance telephone rates on the ground that they were excessive and had been made without due investigation.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—Railroad Administration officials said today higher express charges would be collected in Ohio regardless of the action of the Ohio Public Utilities Commission in declining to approve the new schedule. Their attitude was that the railroad control act authorized the President through the Director General to put new rates into effect and did not authorize State Commissions to suspend.

Action similar to that of the Ohio Commission has been taken in Nebraska, South Dakota, and other Western States where increased express charges have been collected since Jan. 1 without reference to the State Comission's orders.

HOTELS TELL PHONE LOSSES

Four of the Largest Reply to Complaints Before Service Board.

Accountants for a number of hotels testified yesterday before the Second District Public Service Commission concerning the cost and receipts from telephone service in the final hearing on complaints of overcharges. Four large hotels were taken as examples of the situation under the old rates, compared with the reduced prices ordered by Postmaster General Burleson.

The McAlpin, which has 1,881 telephones and is the largest operator of telephones in the hotel world, lost in the year ended on Oct. 31, $28,797.24. Under the reduced rate it lost in December last $4,800. The total income of the system for the year preceding Oct. 1 was $116,879.92, the charge against the system for rent was $20,400, and there were other charges for bookkeeping, messenger service, &c. Arthur J. Lee, who has charge of the hotel's books, told the commission that even under the old 10-cent rate the hotel lost 2 2-3 cents a call, and that under the new rate it was losing more than 7 cents a call. Operators employed by the hotel were paid from $55 to $60 a month.

The telephone company charged the hotel 2½ cents a call for locals and the regular rate for other calls. Intercommunicating service in the hotel, he testified, cost the hotel four or five times as much as for other calls, because employes were required to attend to them, especially those originating outside the hotel. He also testified that the McAlpin had applied to the telephone company for slot machines, but that the request had been refused. If the outside trunk lines could be tapped for service installed by the hotels, the cost would be much less, but the company declined to permit its lines to be used by privately owned systems.

Figures produced by witnesses showed that the Waldorf had a total income from telephone service in the year ended Oct. 31 of $103,146.76; that it charged against the service $13,800 for rent, the cost of accounting, and other charges, and that it lost $5,824.74. The Biltmore receive $143,973.66 in the same period. It charged $25,000 for rent and $6,000 for accounting and paging, and lost $2,137.17. The Astor, the only one of the four that made a profit, earned $4,620.92 in excess of charges.

There was some testimony concerning the cost of pages, detailed bookkeeping, and other expenses that could not be reckoned precisely. One clerk is needed to take care of the telephone calls, and there is another expense for sorting the calls. About 750,000 outgoing telephone calls are handled at a big hotel in a year, and the incoming calls amount to thrice as many. Decision will be rendered later.

GARMENT STRIKE EXPECTED

Leaders Think Union Has Voted to Quit—Manufacturers Meet Today.

The strike vote taken by the 35,000 members of the International Ladies' Garments Workers' Union will be announced this afternoon at a mass meeting in Madison Square Garden. Benjamin Schlessinger, the President, announced yesterday. The polls closed late last night, and the union leaders said they were confident that the strike had been voted.

The manufacturers will meet this morning to decide whether to refuse the demands of the workers. More than 300 shop owners, it was said yesterday, would attend this meeting, which will be addressed by Morris Weiss, President of the Dress and Waist Manufacturers' Association, and Harry A. Gordon, counsel for the association. Frank Morrison, Secretary of the Federation of Labor, will address the workers at the Garden.

The Silk Association of America, Secretary Ramsay Peugnet announced yesterday, is opposed to the forty-eight-hour week for the textile industries, because it cannot be made effective throughout the country. Mr. Peugnet said, in a statement, that demand for the eight-hour day would be refused. The association, the statement said, is expecting legislation that will standardize hours of work in various industries. "The Federal Government should take steps, either through legislation, or other means," the statement says, "to remove the question of hours from the field of industrial controversy. We do not believe the necessary uniformity of practice can be attained through local adjustments or State legislation. Such methods will result, in the future, as they have in the past, in sectional differences and consequent injustices."

MUST ACCOUNT FOR PROFITS

Appellate Court Upholds Grand Central Terminal Decision.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court yesterday affirmed a ruling by the Supreme Court that the firm of Warren & Wetmore, architects, must account to Allen H. Stem, formerly of Reed & Stem, architects, for a share of the profits on the construction of the Grand Central Terminal and the Hotel Biltmore. The sum involved is about $500,000.

In directing the accounting the court found that Reed & Stem got the contract to draw the plans for the Grand Central improvement and were requested by the railroad to have Warren & Wetmore become associated with them on an equal basis. A few days after Mr. Reed's death Charles D. Wetmore of the defendant firm wrote William H. Newman, head of the Grand Central Terminal Improvement Company, suggesting that Mr. Reed's death terminated the contract with Reed & Stem and that Warren & Wetmore should continue the work alone.

The Appellate Division found that the cancellation of the contract with Reed & Stem was brought about "through the secret actions, solicitations, and procurements" of Warren & Wetmore, with the purpose of excluding the plaintiff from the profits of the work after 1911.

General Chemical Company Accused

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—Complaint was filed against the General Chemical Company of New York today by the Federal Trade Commission, charging that the concern had fixed resale prices for "Rizon" baking powder and had refused to furnish its product to dealers which did not maintain the prices so fixed.

MILK CONTROVERSY AGAIN DEADLOCKED

Agreement Between Dairymen and Distributers Is Upset by Minor Detail.

DOWLING THREAT TO QUIT

Chairman Remains on Commission Only at the Urgent Request of the Governor.

A few minutes after the producers and distributers, at a meeting of the Governor's Milk Commission yesterday afternoon, had reached an agreement on the milk prices for New York City for January, February, and March and a telephone report of the terms had been made to Governor Smith, to be released by him from Albany, there arose a dispute between the two factions over a minor detail of the agreement, involving the handling of milk at one small place in the territory, which caused a second message to be sent to the Governor, telling him that the commission was again deadlocked.

Chairman Robert E. Dowling of the Milk Commission asked the Governor to relieve him from further service on the commission, but he was urged by the Governor, at the suggestion of counsel for the New York Milk Conference Board, to hold another session of the body at 11 o'clock this morning, in the hope that the one detail in controversy might be settled. This he consented to do. If the two factions have not agreed by that time, Chairman Dowling said he was requested by the Governor to make public the point at issue.

Milk receipts yesterday were 1,574,374 quarts, or 87 per cent. of the normal supply, an increase of 5 per cent. over Thursday.

Alfred W. McCann, a food expert, was a witness in the milk inquiry before Chief City Magistrate McAdoo yesterday. He declared that corruption among officials and inspectors of the State Department of Agriculture had caused the farmers to become afraid of being victimized by these officials. Meantime, he said, the children of the city suffered. Mr. McCann said that nobody knew whether the milk coming into the city from long distances, as at present, was pure or not. He remarked that he would not feed it to his own children.

Assistant District Attorney Dooling, who is conducting the milk inquiry, was visited at his office yesterday by State Senator James J. Walker and Assemblyman Joseph D. Kelly, who came here to seek information which they said they intended to use in trying to enact legislation to correct conditions which now exist in the milk trade.

Charles W. Burkett, editor of The American Agriculturist, returned yesterday from Albany, where he had attended the annual meeting of the New York State Agricultural Society, which was taken up largely, he said, with the milk situation. The meeting, attended by 1,500 farmers from all counties of the State, adopted resolutions emphatically indorsing the position of the Dairymen's League, and promised their support in the fight, he said. He said that the Horticultural Society meeting at Rochester, N. Y., at the same time had taken similar action.

ALBANY, Jan. 17.—The Governor was told by Chairman Dowling that after it was thought the milk controversy had been adjusted a question arose regarding a milk station in New Hampsire, and that the representatives of the distributers asked that they be given until tomorrow morning to confer with the distributers. While admitting that no agreement had been formally reached, the Governor said that he believed the matter of the one milk station was of a minor character and would not seriously hinder the producers and distributers from reaching an agreement.

Under the terms of the agreement the producer would be paid $4.01 a hundred pounds of milk in January, $3.54 in February, and $3.31 in March. In March the $3.31 rate would apply to producers within a radius of 150 miles of New York, while producers in the 250-mile zone would be paid $3.23. After Jan. 25 the distributers would take all the milk the dairymen sent, and from now until Jan. 25 shipments would be limited only by the number of cans available.

Small Ships May Cross Atlantic Again.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—Restrictions against the use in transatlantic trade of sailing vessels and steamers of less than 2,500 tons were withdrawn today by the Shipping Board. Sailing craft had been barred from this traffic because of the danger from submarines, and small steamers were prohibited from crossing the Atlantic because their slow speed made it impossible for them to keep up with the convoys.

FEARS RAILROAD POLITICS.

It Has Received Too Much Consideration, Thom Tells Senators.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—Elimination of political influences, which, he said, had "inevitably been injected into consideration" of railroad regulations by a commission, was urged by A. P. Thom, counsel for the Association of Railway Executives, today, in continuing his argument for the establishment of a department of transportation, before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee.

While disclaiming any purpose of criticising the men who have served on the Interstate Commerce Commission, Mr. Thom said it was generally admitted political consideration had arisen which ought to be eliminated in dealing with railroad problems.

"When a man reaches the dignity and responsibility of a Cabinet officer," he said, "he is less subject to petty political influences and more likely to decide large questions of public policy solely to the public interest.

"Questions relating to railroad revenues would not be determined by the selfish interests of the railroads or the selfish interests of the shippers, but by the public interest. Transportation ought to have its representative in the Cabinet along with those of agriculture, commerce, and the army and navy.

"Under the plan we have offered the Interstate Commerce Commission would be relieved of some of its burdens and would be raised in dignity as a judicial body. It would act as a check both on the railroads and the Department of Transportation."

The proposed Cabinet member, he said, would not be able to build up a political machine by organising railroad employes under the railway executives' plan, because the individual roads would have charge of their own employes. He urged that Federal incorporation should be compulsory.

Mr. Thom had not concluded his statement when the committee adjourned until Monday.

McCABE'S MAN APPOINTED.

Governor Has McDonald Placed as Deputy Superintendent of Buildings

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 17.—Rumblings of discontent growing out of the fight for up-State leadership between Patrick E. McCabe and William V. Cooke, both of Albany, were dissipated today in the appointment of Patrick H. McDonald as Deputy State Superintendent of Public Buildings.

McCabe, while generally recognized as the local Democratic leader, has had his place contested by Cooke, a follower of Charles F. Murphy of Tammany Hall, who had some trouble with McCabe. The Albany leader wanted the public buildings appointment and patronage. So did Cooke.

The breach widened until today when Governor Smith stepped in and poured oil on the troubled political waters. McDonald is said to be Smith's own appointee, the Governor having insisted that Superintendent McDonough name him.

McDonald is a McCabe man, and on the face of his appointment it looks like a victory for the leader. This aspect is changed, however, by the fact that McCabe, while apparently successful in obtaining the job for one of his followers, will not have the distribution of any of the patronage that goes with the appointment, as it is understood that the Governor has ruled that appointments to any of the twenty-four paying jobs ready for distribution will have to come through local State committeemen first.

The McDonald appointment also brings to light that the Democratic State Committee will meet Tuesday afternoon next in Syracuse when an entirely new method of handling patronage will be adopted. Hereafter State Committeemen are not going to be mere figureheads in the Democratic organization. They will receive more recognition, it is understood, in the hope that trouble may be averted within the ranks.

McDonald gained some notoriety four years ago when he was confidential agent in the State Prison Department and had a physical encounter with Thomas Mott Osborne, then Warden of Sing Sing. His new position pays $3,500 a year.

TO HEAR FORD CASE IN OPEN

Senate Committee Will Hold Public Sessions in Senatorial Contest.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—In taking up Henry Ford's petition contesting the election of Truman H. Newberry to the Senate from Michigan, the Senate Elections Committee adopted unanimously a resolution by Senator Ashurst of Arizona, Democrat, for public hearings.

A sharp conflict developed over the right of the committee to decide a contest for a seat in the next Senate. Chairman Pomerene said, when his resolution for an investigation of the Michigan election was voted down recently, that Mr. Ford's petition for a recount had not been filed and that a new issue was presented with the formal contest. Senator Kellog of Minnesota, Republican, in denying that a new issue had developed, insisted that the contest should be decided by the next Congress. The Chairman said, however, the question would have to be settled later, and discussions with counsel proceeded.

Henry E. Bedman of Detroit, counsel for Newberry, in announcing that the latter desired to co-operate with the committee in preserving all evidence, declared the bill introduced in the Michigan Legislature to have the Michigan Supreme Court take charge of the ballots would protect all interests. Senator Pomerene and other Democrats contended that the Senate itself, through the Privileges and Elections Committee, should act.

Alfred Lucking, Mr. Ford's counsel, in contending that the injunctions and proposed legislation did not meet the situation, asked for an immediate investigation and recount by the committee. He declared that the acknowledged expenditures of $176,000 in Mr. Newberry's campaign were "only a fraction," and charged that they actually reached about $500,000.

Ballots at Marquette and Saginaw already had been destroyed or removed, he said, and correspondence of the Newberry campaign managers had been burned.

"It follows that every day's delay is dangerous," said Mr. Lucking. "If the Senate postpones an investigation for six months or a year, the time will be utilized to destroy and suppress the evidence and put witnesses beyond reach."

CHURCH MADE RICH BY OIL.

Refuses $1,000,000 for Right to Develop Wells in Graveyard.

FORT WORTH, Texas, Jan. 17.—The Merriman Baptist Church of Ranger, which already has acquired an income of $200,000 a year through oil wells sunk in its church yard, has refused $1,000,000 for the right to develop wells in the grave yard which adjoins the church, it became known here today.

The graveyard now is surrounded by oil wells, and numerous companies have made the congregation, which has only twenty-nine members, fabulous offers for the burying ground.

The congregation has voted that none of its members shall profit personally by its good fortune, but that the entire income shall be devoted to the glory of God. One hundred thousand dollars already has been distributed among Baptist institutions in this State.

Liners to Use Havre Again.

HAVRE, Jan. 17.—The French line of steamships, which abandoned the port of Havre as the French terminus of its transatlantic service during the war, will resume the use of that port for its steamers from New York, beginning next month. The first vessel of the line scheduled to reach here will be the Rochambeau, on Feb. 4.

REACH AGREEMENT IN KNIT GOODS TRADE

Manufacturers and Jobbers Arrange for "Adjustments" to Stabilize Prices.

BUYERS FEARED DECLINE

Wholesalers Predict Heavy Volume of Business, Especially in West and Southwest.

The American knit goods and hosiery industries yesterday made a working agreement with the big dry goods jobbing interests of the country, which had the effect of removing much of the post-war uncertainty as to the immediate future course of prices, and which had caused wholesalers to hesitate in placing orders for Fall merchandise.

Nearly 600 manufacturers, selling agents, and jobbers from every part of the United States gathered yesterday morning at the Waldorf-Astoria to effect such stabilization of the underwear and hosiery markets, as would make it feasible for jobbers to place orders without fear that commodity prices might sag between the time of placing orders and the delivery of the goods. Yesterday's conference, which was held under the auspices of a special committee appointed by the Jobbers' Association of Knit Goods Buyers, was the culmination of a series of dry goods jobbers' meetings held in this city this week. Buyers had refrained from placing their usual orders until it was definitely ascertained whether they would be protected in their purchases against a falling market. On the other hand, manufacturers were confronted with the possibility that the buyers would return to their homes without satisfying their future requirements in the matter of stocks.

At the afternoon session a committee of five from each of the big organizations met and canvassed the war's readjustment period in all of its phases. It was realized that if the mills were to be kept in operation it would be necessary to make concessions to the distributers, and, accordingly, when the committees reported back to the general meeting, the statement was made that the manufacturers would make "adjustments" on the lowest prices quoted on goods sold between now and June 1 or July 1 next, depending upon the character of the merchandise involved. This action proved gratifying to the buyers attending the conference, and the meeting broke up with the feeling that for the next six months or so distributers could place orders without fear of losses.

Nearly all of the wholesalers predicted a heavy volume of business, while those from the West and Southwest said the purchasing power of their respective communities was simply limitless.

Formal resolutions adopted at the conference specified that in the matter of Fall wool and cotton underwear the price of the goods on a given order would be adjusted to the lowest price the manufacturer made to July 1, 1919, providing 50 per cent. of the manufacturer's average annual production to the American trade was sold by the above-mentioned date. In consideration of this recommendation to adjust prices the manufacturers insisted that no cancellation be given on their merchandise except for nondelivery, goods thirty days late, or for inferior goods.

Relative to hosiery, the manufacturers recommended that the sellers of cotton hosiery agree to adjust their prices on their sales up to June 1, 1919. This was explained to mean that if the manufacturers sold an article at $3, and if they reduced the price on March 1 or any other date to $2.75, any undelivered goods which they had on order would be billed at such lower price up to June 1.

It was set forth in the resolutions that fleeced and woolen hosiery was to take the same adjustment recommendation as that applying to Fall underwear. "In consideration of this recommendation to adjust prices," the resolution said, "we insist that no cancellation be given on our merchandise except for nondelivery which is thirty days late or for inferior goods."

The organizations represented at yesterday's meeting included the National Association of Hosiery and Underwear Manufacturers, National Association of Knit Goods Selling Agents, Southern Wholesale Dry Goods Association, Underwear Manufacturers of America, and the National Wholesale Dry Goods Association.

COMMERCIAL PAPER.

Yesterday..5@5¼ per cent. for the best names
Thursday..5@5¼

The quotations are for six months' paper.

Have Reduced Their Prices.

Information received in the muslin underwear trade is to the effect that very little buying is being done at the present time, especially where the materials were bought at the higher prices. One firm said yesterday that it is almost impossible to sell merchandise at the prevailing prices. Although in some cases the price has been reduced from 25 to 30 per cent., it has not proved much of an inducement to the jobbing and retail trade.

Higher-Priced Blouses in Demand.

Buyers who are now in the city purchasing the new lines of women's blouses are apparently more interested in the higher priced goods. Some firms say that the orders now being received are relatively small in comparison with those taken last year. Others state that they are taking some large orders from the out-of-town trade, but find the local stores a little slow in buying their Spring lines.

Negligees Are Selling.

Reports received from salesmen in the West and South are to the effect that negligees selling at wholesale from $10 to $25 are much more in demand than the cheaper lines. In almost every section good-sized orders are being taken, except in the New England States, where buyers are not particularly interested in these goods. In the Spring showing georgette and combinations of chiffon and georgette are being used quite largely. Several embroidery and hand-painted effects on lightweight materials are among the new offerings.

Buying a Little Earlier.

In view of the unsettled conditions in the dress manufacturing industry, the local trade are placing their orders a little earlier this season. It is said that this precaution is being taken in order that they will be covered if things become worse. A large number of out-of-town buyers were in the city yesterday, and the orders that were placed more than measure up to the ones received last year. In almost every case buyers are more inclined toward purchasing the higher grade merchandise.

Gray Goods Prices Firmer.

There was a decidedly firmer tone to the local gray goods market yesterday and the tendency was toward higher prices than the day before. There were a number of sales of printcloths from first hands for January, February, and March delivery, the constructions being 39-inch 68-72s, which went at 12¼ cents, and of 38½-inch 64-60s, which brought 10¾ cents. It looked extremely doubtful, as the market closed, if any more goods could be had at these figures. In sheetings there were sales of 36-inch 5.50s at 10¾ cents. Some business was also done in sateens and twills, but in these the market was easier.

Orders for Infants' Wear.

Believing that prices will be lower, many cancellations have been received of late by manufacturers of infants' wear from retail stores throughout the country. Despite this fact, the road business is very good, although the volume of orders is not as large as was received during the last season. It is said that the price of the cheaper grade of goods will possibly be lower, and that of the better grades higher. Some of the buyers outside of the city are not placing any orders until they come into the market, believing that merchandise can be bought cheaper here.

Sweater Trade Active.

There has been much activity in the local sweater trade during the week, and some very substantial orders are being received. The demand for women's fibre silk sweaters has increased to such an extent that some difficulty is being had in making shipments fast enough. At first it was thought by the manufacturers that the sale was confined to certain sections of the country, but with the arrival of the out-of-town buyers it was found to be general. In the South and on the Pacific Coast, business has been exceptionally good. From the latter section an order was received during the first part of the week for $7,000 worth of this merchandise.

Coal Trade Situation.

Another week of moderate temperatures has increased the apathy of the public toward the coal question, and this, of course, is felt in wholesale as well as retail offices, Saward's Weekly will say today. Locally, the anthracite situation is so dull that the tying-up of harbor transportation for half a week did not cause the least trouble to retail dealers. They are loaded up with broken, egg, and pea coal, which their customers will not take as long as stove and chestnut are available. Conditions have not yet reached a point where individual operators are obliged to make price concessions on their domestic coal, but retailers are looking for weakness to develop at any time and so are buying only from hand to mouth. Price weakness is becoming more general in the bituminous trade. The lower grades are steadily slipping, and the instability in this part of the market is beginning to extend to the medium quality coals. The best grades remain firm, but are available in larger volume to spot buyers.

SURE GIRL'S SLAYER WAS HER PURSUER

Woman Neighbor of Miss Riddell Tells of Chase by Man the Day of the Murder.

LITTLE PROGRESS BY POLICE

Several Suspects Questioned, One Being an Austrian, in Jail—Victim's Funeral Today.

Detectives made little progress yesterday in attempting to solve the murder of Marie Elizabeth Riddell, the 17-year-old stenographer whose body was found in a vacant lot near her home in the Glen Morris district of Richmond Hill, Long Island, on Thursday morning, though during the day suspects were picked up in various parts of Queens. Most of these were discharged.

Last night detectives hastened to the Long Island City Jail to question John Musse, an Austrian, who was arrested as a vagrant in Elmhurst on Thursday evening. Early in the day they had treated the arrest of Musse with indifference. What caused them suddenly to become interested in him could not be learned. Musse, ragged and unkempt, was arrested by a policeman who accused him of accosting a woman. His head had been cut and he told the police he was injured while at work in Potsdam, N. Y.

A witness came forward yesterday who believes she was pursued by Miss Riddell's assailant. She is Mrs. George J. Blackhall of 10,416 110th Street, a neighbor of the Riddell family and the wife of a policeman attached to the Clymer Street Station, Brooklyn. On Wednesday afternoon, she said, she went for a walk, and when within a block or two of her home saw "a wild-looking" man coming across lots toward her. She turned back, and the fellow quickened his pace. She ran, and the man ran after her.

She said she got home and opened the door just as the man reached the house. He then walked away. She described the man as a "big, raw-boned fellow," and so sure is she that he was Miss Riddell's assailant that she spent most of yesterday looking for him.

A young woman whose name the police will not give has told of being followed by two white men on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings while walking in the Ridgewood section of Brooklyn.

Through witnesses the police have established that Miss Riddell was murdered soon after 6:20 o'clock Wednesday evening. Miss Emma Ahlers of Morris Park saw Miss Riddell enter an elevated train at the Brooklyn Bridge that would arrive at the Lefferts Avenue station about 6:20 P. M. She passed the lot where the body was found at 6:30 o'clock and saw nothing suspicious. This is corroborated by Miss Anna Carroll of Morris Park, who rode on the same train with Miss Riddell. She saw the girl get off, and no one was following her.

With tears streaming down his face and clutching a newspaper containing a picture of the girl, a youth paced up and down in front of the Riddell home yesterday morning. To the police he sobbed: "I loved that girl, although I never saw her. I loved her from her picture. I want to find her murderer." He proved to be Abraham Eke, of 242 Vermont Street, East New York. The police told him to go home.

The men who were picked up yesterday were in most cases found loitering in various sections of Queens and could not give satisfactory accounts of themselves. One man was arrested because there were bloodstains on a bundle he carried. He proved in the Jamaica Court that the blood came from a cut on his finger.

Miss Riddell will be buried today. High requiem mass will be celebrated at 10 o'clock this morning in St. Benedict Joseph's Roman Catholic Church, Morris Park. Burial will follow in St. John's Cemetery, Middle Village.

COURTS TO BE SEVERE.

Abduction Charges to be Made Against Assailants of Women.

The criminal court Judges and the District Attorney have agreed on more severe punitive measures as a deterrent of crimes against women on the public streets. It has been decided that men who attack women on the streets and drag them into hallways may be charged technically with abduction instead of the lesser crime of assault, as heretofore. Conviction for abduction means much more severe punishment, and a maximum sentence under the law.

Gusta Mastaple of 305 East 103d Street, one of a gang of Harlem thugs who have been annoying women on the upper east side, and the first of his type of abductors to be tried on the new charge, was found guilty yesterday in General Sessions within five minutes after the case went to the jury. Mastaple was charged with seizing Annie Simon, 13 years old, of 1,941 First Avenue, and dragging her into the hallway at 240 East 102d Street on the night of Nov. 25. The girl was rescued by the janitress of the building, Mrs. Elizabeth King, assisted by some of the tenants, who beat the girl's assailant before he succeeded in making his escape.

Many other complaints came from that section and Assistant District Attorney Goldstein was assigned to investigate conditions. As the result the police made numerous arrests. Judge Mulqueen, announcing that he would sentence Mastaple on Jan. 27, said to Mr. Goldstein:

"Continue your work against men of Mastaple's type. I want you to rid the city of such rascals and I will help you to do it."

JACQUES LEBAUDY BURIED.

Little Daughter Principal Witness at Inquest in Hempstead.

Special to The New York Times.

WESTBURY, L. I., Jan. 17.—Jacques Lebaudy was buried in the church yard of St. Brigid's Roman Catholic Church today. There were only a few persons at the funeral, the principal mourner being Jacqueline Lebaudy, the eleven-year-old daughter. Before the service in the church, Father William F. McGinnis explained that Lebaudy was buried in consecrated ground because, though his life had not been that of a good Catholic, he was not considered responsible for his actions.

Mrs. Lebaudy was not present at the inquest before Coroner Jones in Hempstead as she was too ill to attend. Little Jacqueline was the principal witness. She identified the revolver found on a dresser in her mother's room as one she had seen her mother carry three weeks before the shooting, and told of the incidents of the night her father was killed.

Mrs. Minnie Wiedner, the nurse, testified that she was in a room upstairs with Mrs. Lebaudy when they were startled by the sound of tables and chairs being overturned on the floor below. Mrs. Lebaudy went downstairs while the nurse went into the bathroom. Then came the shots. She ran back into Mrs. Lebaudy's room, and as Mrs. Lebaudy entered she put one hand on the dresser and then fell sobbing across the bed, crying: "God will never forgive me!"

Constable Leonard Thorn identified a revolver shown as the one found on Mrs. Lebaudy's dresser, which Mrs. Wiedner said she thought Mrs. Lebaudy had placed there. He told also of finding a loaded revolver in Lebaudy's overcoat pocket. Drs. Paul T. Ferrer and Howard M. Phipps, who were called to the house after the shooting, also testified.

No will has yet been found, and it was said today that Mrs. Lebaudy's counsel will apply for letters of administration for her.

LEO FRANK'S ACCUSER SHOT

Jim Conley, Atlanta Negro, Wounded in Attempt at Burglary.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Ga., Jan. 17.—Jim Conley, the negro whose testimony was largely responsible for the conviction of Leo Frank for the murder of Mary Phagan, was shot recently while trying to break into an Atlanta store. Conley was only slightly wounded. He admitted the attempt to commit burglary, and is in jail awaiting trial.

Jim Conley was the negro whose testimony was the chief factor in the evidence against Leo M. Frank, who was charged with the murder of Mary Phagan, a 14-year-old factory girl, at Atlanta, on April 26, 1913. Every resource of the courts of this country was tried unsuccessfully to free Frank, and prominent lawyers analyzed the testimony and wrote articles tending to show how the evidence, so far from convicting Frank, seemed to fix the guilt on Conley.

Governor Slaton commuted the sentence of Frank. This decision was made on June 21, 1915. On July 17 an attempt was made on the life of Frank by William Green, a fellow-convict at the prison farm at Milledgeville. Frank's throat was cut, the jugular vein being severed, and he had not recovered from the effects of the attack when the whole country was aroused by his lynching. Twenty-five armed men overpowered the prison guards and warden at 11:30 P. M. on Aug. 16. Frank was then taken on a wild ride to the outskirts of Marietta, 100 miles away, where he was hanged within a stone's throw of the hillside birthplace of Mary Phagan.

Fraternity Honors Fallen Members.

Members of the Phi Delta Pi fraternity now in this city attending its convention held memorial services last night at the Hotel McAlpin for Douglas Curtis, a member of Alpha Chapter, and William Kirschner of Cornell University, who died in the military service. Conrad J. Saphire of New York, Supreme Proctor, presided. The convention is considering the most effective means of aiding crippled soldiers returning to this country. The convention will end tonight with a dinner at the Hotel Martinique.

Charlotte Seeks Allies' Favor.

LUXEMBURG, Jan. 17.—Grand Duchess Charlotte Adelgonde, after she had taken the oath of office Wednesday, addressed the delegation of the Chamber of Deputies which had been sent to her to receive her affirmation. RADIO TELEPHONE DIRECTS AIRSHIPS

Demonstration by Navy in Opening Campaign for War Savings Stamps.

PLANES DO AS INSTRUCTED

Change Course While Flying in Heavy Mist on Orders from Roof of Equitable Building.

A demonstration in directing aircraft by radio telephone was given yesterday from the roof of the Equitable Building. It was arranged by the navy as a feature of the opening of the $2,000,000,000 War Savings Stamp campaign. The radio communication was between a group of men on the roof of the Equitable Building and Navy Dirigible A242, escorted by a formation of airplanes from the Rockaway Station. The airship, commanded by Ensign John Benridge, cruised over the city for about half an hour, following the directions given by wireless telephone. The weather was thick and the machines appeared at an altitude of about 1,000 feet.

James S. Alexander, President of the National Bank of Commerce, was the first of the civilians present to communicate with the airship. He got into touch with Ensign Bark, the radio man on the dirigible, after the navy operators had made the necessary adjustments. At that time the weather was so thick that the aircraft could not be seen. Mr. Alexander inquired when they would come into sight, and almost while he was talking the formation came through the mist.

"You will circle about the Woolworth Building," directed Mr. Alexander. The blimp almost immediately changed her course, and headed to execute the order. This accomplished it carried out other spoken orders from the group on the housetop. Mr. Alexander said Ensign Bark's brief replies had been quite distinct. He had requested the Ensign to speak slowly and distinctly, and when this was done he heard every word clearly.

Others who conversed with the operator on the airship as it circled over the lower part of the city were George T. Wilson, Major Gen. Thomas H. Barry, Major Gen. Davis C. Shanks, Guy Emerson, Vernon Munroe, and A. M. Anderson.

Special to The New York Times.

ORANGE, N. J., Jan. 17.—As an example of thrift to his employes Thomas A. Edison bought today $1,000 in War Savings Stamps of the 1919 issue. Mr. Edison made a personal appeal to his men to lend their money to the Government by buying stamps. "Prosperity is on the way as soon as we clear up the war debts," he said. "The individual will get his share of that prosperity in proportion to his willingness to work for it." Charles Edison, the inventor's son, is Chairman of the Edison War Committee.

WANTS RADIOS RETURNED.

Congressman Rowe Also Thinks $3,000,000 Should Be Recovered.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—Representative Rowe of New York, a member of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, urged in the House today, referring to the purchase by the Navy Department of the Marconi and Federal Wireless System, that the Attorney General's Department should institute proceedings to force a restitution of the money expended by the Navy Department for these systems, approximating $3,000,000, and the restoration of the properties to their original owners.

His speech followed the action yesterday of the committee in laying on the table the bill to authorize the navy to purchase the entire wireless systems of the country.

"I think that this matter should be referred to the Attorney General to recover and put back in the Treasury of the United States the money paid to the Marconi Company and the Federal Company," said Mr. Rowe. "When the United States declared war against Germany all the companies doing a wireless business in the United States and on shipboard turned their plants over to the Secretary of the Navy and he has been operating them ever since. There is no excuse that can be offered for the purchasing of these stations without the full authority of Congress."

CONGRESSMEN WARN ORTH.

Security League Official May Be Cited for Contempt.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—Charles D. Orth, Chairman of the Congressional Committee of the National Security League, was warned today by Chairman Johnson of the special House committee investigating the league's political activities, that his attitude had been exasperating, and that if continued he would recommend that the witness be taken before the bar of the House for contempt.

"If such answers as Mr. Orth has made were given in any court of the land," Chairman Johnson said, "he would have been in jail long ago. They have been unmistakably evasive. I will not attempt to say what his motive is, but will say the committee has stood for them long enough."

The witness said he had tried to be frank, but that he was unable to answer abstract legal questions. He asked if he would be permitted to employ counsel to advise him in regard to the relevancy of the questions, but the Chairman replied that committee members could decide that for themselves.

"In that case I guess a lawyer would be useless," said Mr. Orth.

$15,000 Verdict for Baby Upheld.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Jan. 17.—An award of $15,000 damages to the baby son of a man killed by a railroad and an award of $12,000 to the widow is not excessive, Supreme Court Justice Seeger decided here today. The verdict against the New York Central Railroad for the death of John Schwarz of the Bronx, was brought in here on Tuesday. The baby was born six months after the father was killed.

WARNS AGAINST AGITATORS.

Kahn Says Future Standards Will Be Measured by Achievement.

Against foes within no less than enemies without, the American people would ever know how to preserve and protect their treasured inheritance of democracy, said Otto H. Kahn, speaking last night at the annual dinner of the Rutgers Alumni Association at Delmonico's. Mr. Kahn warned against the disturbing agitators of foreign birth "who seek to uproot the foundations of the house that gave them shelter," declaring that these "devotees of liberty" were not the representatives of labor, either organized or unorganized.

"After the profound upheaval of the war," said the speaker, "the standard by which men will be judged and rewarded will be more strictly, exactingly, and far-reachingly than heretofore that of work done, duty performed, service rendered. The world will have no place for idlers and social slackers. Rank will reside not in birth or wealth—neither, I trust, will it reside in an office holding caste but in useful achievement."

Are Our Soldiers Getting a "Square Deal?"

As the din of war dies away, lesser sounds become audible and our papers are beginning to give ear to various creakings and joltings of our military machine with special attention to their effect upon the individual soldier.

Thus we hear many complaints that discharged soldiers are stranded far from home without money or a job, that we have not provided adequate hospital accommodation for our returning wounded; that there is an unpardonable holding back of soldiers' pay and the allotments of pay made by soldiers to their families; and that there is delay and inaccuracy in publishing the casualty lists and excessive slowness and failure in handling the soldiers' mail.

In an important article in this week's LITERARY DIGEST these various complaints are set forth and the views of newspaper editors and others regarding them are presented. Other articles of great interest in this number are:

Even in the air it finds a hearty welcome. Witness this tribute received from a Major in the Aviation Service, along with a battered and discolored specimen of a recent issue: "I am returning herewith a copy of THE LITERARY DIGEST, which might possibly interest you. This copy accompanied me in an aerial trip of about 600 miles over France, and was read practically from cover to cover, at an average altitude of about 8,000 feet." TROOPS MASSED TO GUARD VOTING IN BERLIN TODAY

Full Protection Believed to be Assured as New Forces Enter the City.

CALL ASSEMBLY FOR FEB. 16

Police Precautions Taken by Richter, the New Head of the Berlin Forces.

PARTIES CONFUSE VOTERS

Women Electors Largely Outnumber the Men — Socialists Fear Drift to Moderates.

LONDON, Jan. 18, (Associated Press.)— A Berlin dispatch states that full protection for Sunday's election of delegates to the German National Assembly seems to be assured in that city and its suburbs.

A German Government wireless message says that Philipp Scheidemann, the Foreign Secretary, announced today that the Government had decided to convoke the National Assembly on Feb. 16.

Troops are being massed in the capital in overwhelming force. The rounding up of the criminal element and unauthorized bearers of arms there is proceeding satisfactorily.

Additional troops who have entered Berlin have occupied the whole centre of the city, as well as the northern and northwestern sections. Heavy artillery has been placed in Doenhoff-Platz and Spittel-Markt, field guns stand at various points in the closely guarded district, including Unter den Linden, and armored cars and tanks have been prepared for instant use.

All the streets in the sections named are under guard. It is impossible to pass without identification and without satisfying the soldiers that arms are not carried.

Police Mobilized for Election.

BERLIN, Jan. 14. (via Copenhagen.)—Police President Richter informed THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent today that he had already taken measures to have all the Berlin polling places strongly guarded by police next Sunday to prevent any interference in the election by the Spartacides, who have put up no candidates for the National Assembly, being determined to prevent it if they can do so.

The Military Governor of Berlin, Herr Noske, is also preparing energetic measures for the suppression of any riots on the critical Sunday. He has now a large force of soldiers, perhaps 12,000 men, and more are enlisting hourly, permitting the hope that Berlin will be patrolled effectively.

Still the public is prepared for localized trouble in Berlin as well as other parts of Germany. This fear, however, is in nowise dampening the ardor of the election campaign, which has now reached its climax. While housetop wars have been proceeding overhead impromptu meetings have been held in the streets below and stump speakers' shrill voices have mingled with the barking of machine guns and the thud of hand grenades.

At every street corner in the centre of the city campaign literature is sold or distributed and the show windows are covered with large posters advising citizens to "Vote for Karl; he will get you all" — meaning all they desire in the way of efficient government.

The candidates of all parties love to pose in poetry before their constituencies.

People Confused About Parties.

Despite the great interest taken in the elections by the people, many are still utterly confused regarding the merits of the different parties. In place of the old parties, except the Socialist, new parties have made their appearance, all having adopted names which would lead the unsophisticated to believe that they are the stanchest supporters of government for the people and by the people.

Bank to Sue ex-Kaiser Karl for Big Debt to War Loan

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Co. Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

GENEVA, Jan. 18.—The newspaper Deli Hirlap of Budapest says the Commercial Bank of Budapest has decided to sue ex-Emperor Charles for the payment of 100,000,000 crowns, representing the amount subscribed by Charles during the war to eight Austro-Hungarian war loans.

The money was never paid at the time and the ex-Emperor now refuses to honor his signature, and has left unanswered all communications addressed to him by the bank on the subject.

The Archdukes of Hapsburg are following the ex-Emperor's example and likewise refuse to acknowledge the debts they contracted with Austro-Hungarian banks by their subscriptions to war loans.

Foch Prepared to Break Off Armistice if Violated—German Officials Protest Terms.

TREVES, Jan. 16.—The meeting of the Allied and German Armistice Commissions here was adjourned late today after the armistice had been extended for one month from Jan. 16. The most important of the new conditions are those relating to supplying food to Germany and other peoples of Europe. The amount supplied to Germany will be limited, and Germany must turn over shipping in German and neutral ports for the transportation of this food from America not only for Germany but for other nations.

The announcement of this decision of the Allies brought forth a somewhat stormy session because the Germans thought they should have recompense in money for use of their shipping.

In consideration of the shipping proposition, Chairman Hurley of the United States Shipping Board made some provisions looking to the taking of the American Army of Occupation home by way of the Rhine, using some German ships.

The German Commissioners were told shortly that Germany must speed up on fulfilling the armistice terms relating to the turning over of railroad stock and naval equipment.

The details of the adjustment of the Commissioners will be made public at Paris.

Allotment of German Steamers.

PARIS, Jan. 18.—All the great German liners and the more important of the other German passenger steamers, the list including the huge Imperator, may be placed on the North Atlantic route to transport American troops homeward, under the agreement for the extension of the German armistice signed at Treves. The German mercantile fleet, virtually in its entirety, is placed at the disposal of the associated Governments, to be distributed among them in accordance with the needs of the various nations. Only some of the smaller steamships are left to the Germans.

The allotment of the steamers among the associated powers will be governed partly by the respective needs of the nations and partly by the suitability of the steamers for use on particular routes. The giant liners, like the Imperator and the other big modern steamers finished during the war, are too deep in draft to pass through the Suez Canal. Hence Great Britain will take the moderate-sized steamers for the Australian service. The smaller steamers that are left to the Germans are for their needs in the Baltic coastal traffic.

Equitable remuneration for the use of these ships is to be paid to Germany. The money will be applied in payment for foodstuffs furnished to Germany under another part of the agreement. The supplies to be furnished include 70,000 tons of pork, to satisfy the urgent need of Germany for fats. The furnishing of 200,000 tons of cereals is provided for, but for part of this amount condensed milk may be substituted.

The meetings at which the shipping arrangement was elaborated were held separately from those of the regular

CONFERENCE OPEN TO PRESS

Newspaper Men of All Nations Allowed to Attend Session.

FUTURE COURSE IN DOUBT

But American Correspondents Draft a Formal Demand for Five Seats at Meetings.

ASK ACCESS TO DELEGATES

Also Want Reports on Secret Sessions That May Be Held by Envoys.

PARIS, Jan. 18.—The first formal session of the Peace Conference was opened freely to the press of all nations today. At how many of the succeeding sessions the decisions of the conference will be reached in camera has not been indicated, but the American newspaper men, and probably also the British and Italians, are preparing to reopen the question of publicity if they should decide that the flow of news is impeded by rules of secrecy.

The representatives of the American newspaper men, in acknowledging the receipt of the Supreme Council's decision regarding publicity, requested that in case secret sessions were held the names of the delegates presenting motions for secrecy and the agreements reached in camera should be announced later. They demanded a minimum of five press seats for the Americans, with priority for the three press associations serving newspapers generally.

They also assumed in their communication that the rule forbidding the delegates to discuss the doings of the conference with the correspondents would not be enforced. While no announcement on this subject has been made, it is learned on the authority of delegates that the rule does still obtain.

What further action the correspondents will take will probably appear next week, when the exact character of the press representation and the number of newspaper men to be admitted to the conference will be determined.

Following is the text of the American communication to the Supreme Council:

"The American press delegation acknowledges the reply of the Peace Conference to the resolutions addressed to them. The delegation notes that the decision 'that representatives of the press shall be admitted to the meetings of the full conference' is an acceptance of the principle of direct press representation, for which the press of America, Great Britain, Italy, and smaller nations have contended.

"The value of this principle, however, turns on the extent and frequency of its limitations in practice. The Peace Conference announces its intention to limit it to the extent that 'upon necessary occasions' the deliberations of the Conference may be held in camera.' Without assent on our part to this limitation, we trust that if ever it is applied, the public will be advised through the press at the outset of each session in camera of the subject to be discussed and the name of the delegate or delegation making the motion to go in camera, and at the close of the session the conclusions or agreement reached.

"In view of the fact that we have not been advised to the contrary, we assume that any rule designed to prohibit communication between individual delegates and the press on subjects of the conference has now been abrogated, and that the press is to have access to the verbatim records of proceedings.

"We call the attention of the Peace Conference to our request for not fewer than five direct press representatives at each session of the conference, and we submit that because of the manner in which the several press associations serve the newspapers of America, and because of attendance upon the conference of numerous individual press representatives, the American newspapers cannot carry on their business of informing their vast public with fewer than five representatives."

Jan. 17.—It is understood that when the Supreme War Council adjourned today there was pending a plan for one open and five secret sessions per week.

It now seems that the concessions made by the Supreme Council today constitute what might be called "half a loaf." It is understood that these concessions were made after a vigorous discussion led by President Wilson, who was supported by British delegates.

Mr. Wilson has received many cablegrams from the United States, almost all of which have urged him to contend for the fullest publicity consistent with the success of the congress.

1,000,000 Russians Died in German Prison Camps

LONDON, Jan. 18.—Of the 2,000,000 Russian prisoners scattered throughout the Central Empires, 1,000,000 died in captivity, according to The Morning Post. Repatriated British prisoners of war have brought reports of the inhuman treatment of Russian prisoners in the concentration camps of Germany and Austria, and these stories have been borne out by a report recently received by the International Red Cross from some of its delegates who have just returned from Germany.

According to these reports, the Russians were subjected to terrible brutalities and were forced to do heavy and degrading work, whether sick or well. They were always half starved and were under the constant stimulus of the lash. Some 800,000 of the Russians still remain in Germany.

PERMANENT PEACE IS BRITAIN'S AIM

Terms Regarded as Coinciding in Almost Every Detail with Those of America.

ALL SEAS OPEN TO TRADE

Indemnity Claimed to Include Air Raid Damage and Shipping Losses.

PARIS, Jan. 17.—Careful investigation here has made it possible to give more concretely than previously an outline of the war claims of Great Britain and her general desires regarding the making of peace.

The British aims, the unofficial representation of them shows, are regarded as in general coinciding with those of the American delegation at the Peace Conference. There are some minor differences of opinion between Great Britain and America regarding the final adjustment of the world's affairs, and these differences remain to be reconciled. On the whole, however, the aims of the two nations are considered by British commentators as identical.

Great Britain believes, first, it is declared in these sources, that a League of Nations is desirable and attainable, and that none of the British war aims will be considered practicable unless they conform with the tenets of such a league as is contemplated to realign and govern the affairs of the universe. She also believes that things should be so adjusted that the war aims of every country will conform with those of the others—in other words, that there should be a compact of give and take.

Raid Damages; Payment for Ships.

As to indemnities, Great Britain expects to enter a pool with other nations. Her claims are comparatively small, it is said, but she wants her air raid damage and her shipping losses paid for.

In addition to the League of Nations, one of the great things which Great Britain hopes will grow out of the Peace Conference, it is apparent, is a thoroughly good working agreement with the United States. Great importance is attached to this.

Great Britain, it is declared by the interpreters of her views, has no interest on the Continent of Europe other than that permanent peace and justice be maintained. She thinks that the principle of self-determination should have full play, and that freedom of transit, both by rail and waterways, should be kept up. She desires, it is stated, to see countries such as Switzerland have access to the sea, this not only in the interest of the trade of Great Britain, but of that of the world, and she holds that there are numerous ports which should be made free, including Constantinople.

As to the freedom of the seas, Great Britain, it is maintained, will in the future as in the past aim at securing the greatest possible freedom for commerce to all nations in times of peace. This, it is said, is what she means by the freedom of the seas. The question of the rules of warfare by sea she considers quite separate and as requiring discussion, but she hopes that the causes of the war will be removed.

Great Britain desires the greatest freedom of trade on land and sea and she expects a League of Nations to guarantee this, it is stated. Before the war, it is pointed out, British colonies were open to the world. The British consider that Germany abused the privileges offered and that each German tradesman was a potential spy and Great Britain has no desire to return to this condition of affairs. She wants to rid trade of the political element which Germany injected into it.

Great Britain does not want to become a protectionist power, it is declared, but she does not wish free trade to put her at a disadvantage. Unless the Peace Conference eliminates the objectionable features existing before the war it is

CLEMENCEAU THE FAVORITE

Wilson Received with Doffing of Hats—Many American Soldiers as Spectators.

By WALTER DURANTY.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company. Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Jan. 18.—Imagine that you are standing in front of the French Foreign Office on the Quai d'Orsay, beside the Seine, at 2:30 this afternoon. Before you stretches a long, low building with the Tricolor on its summit waving in the bright Winter sun. The courtyard is thronged with soldiers and officers in picturesque uniforms.

There are sentries at the gates around which the crowd presses eagerly, and on the railings of the garden running along to the Chamber of Deputies on the left—like a Greek temple, with columns and sculptured frieze—soldiers in khaki, Americans and Australians for the most part, are clinging, perched head and shoulders above the crowd. On the right the gilt eagles that top the columns at the entrance to the Alexander III. Bridge across the Seine glitter in the sunlight. That bridge was the symbol of France's friendship with Russia; but now, in the hour of France's triumph, Russia alone among her friends is unrepresented.

Behind runs the Seine, no longer flooded, but still swollen, and behind the river the wide expanse of the Place de la Concorde, with the slim obelisk in the centre that commemorates the epoch in which the "rights of man" and human freedom were baptized in blood. Far in the background the sun irradiates the gilt dome of the Invalides, where sleeps the great despot and war-maker, Napoleon Bonaparte.

And just under the shadow of his tomb the free nations of the world are meeting this afternoon in order that there may be no more despotism and no more war.

The crowd is small and apathetic—barely 2,000 at the outside. The people are massed on the sidewalks six or seven deep for a hundred yards to the right and left of the Foreign Office gates. As the stately limousines bearing the delegates to the conference glide past there is a ripple of interest.

Military Salutes for Wilson.

"Which is President Wilson?" is the most frequent question, and as the car with the tall, upright figure of the President enters the courtyard the soldiers in the crowd salute, and many civilians doff their hats. They do the same for Lloyd George and Clemenceau, whose arrival is greeted by a fanfare from the military band within the courtyard, but there is no cheering, no excitement.

As Clemenceau passes with his bristling white mustache and fighter's profile, a poilu beside me murmurs:

"He looks calm, the old one. You can't stir him easily. He was like that when I saw him in Champagne, right at the very front. A shell burst twenty yards away, and he never turned a hair—just threw his head back and looked right ahead of him. You know the way he does."

"I'd like to see him sitting at the head of the table in there. If it were not for him we might be waiting long enough yet for our peace conference."

As 3 o'clock approaches the cars succeed one another more rapidly, and the crowd gives up the attempt to recognize the delegates or even guess their nationality. The major nations have a tiny national flag above the bonnets of their cars, but the others have a perfect festoon of allied bunting across the windshield.

Finally, at two minutes before 3 o'clock comes the huge black limousine of President Poincaré, preceded by another containing his Military Attaché. As the crowd swirls around the sentries at the very entrance of the courtyard, a fanfare again blares out to greet the chief of the French State.

The President pauses for a moment at the head of the steps before the doorway, where Clemenceau is waiting to greet him. Then the two pass the folding doors together.

The privileged occupants of the courtyard move away, and outside the police resume without difficulty the control they had lost for the moment over the sightseers. The latter drift off slowly, pausing here and there to admire some of the delegates' automobiles drawn up by the quayside in default of accommodation for all in the courtyard.

There is little comment as we move slowly across the bridge to the Place de la Concorde, beyond which two American flags fly at half staff in mourning for Colonel Roosevelt.

"Well, they've made a beginning at last," says a woman in a plain black dress. "Now let's hope they end it quickly, so that my boy can come home again, and we all can make a new start."

If the whole of France had a voice it would echo her words as an invocation to the Peace Conference.

Wilson Praises Clemenceau, Moving Election; Premier, Accepting, Pleads for a Closer Union

PARIS, Jan. 18.—In his speech at the opening of the Peace Conference today, proposing Premier Clemenceau for the permanent Chairmanship, President Wilson said:

Mr. Chairman—It gives me great pleasure to propose as permanent Chairman of the conference Mr. Clemenceau, the President of the council.

I would do this as a matter of custom. I would do this as a tribute to the French Republic. But I wish to do it as something more than that. I wish to do it as a tribute to the man.

France deserves the precedence not only because we are meeting at her capital, and because she has undergone some of the most tragical suffering of the war, but also because her capital, her ancient and beautiful capital, has so often been the centre of conferences of this sort, on which the fortunes of large parts of the world turned.

It is a very delightful thought that the history of the world, which has so often centred here, will now be crowned by the achievements of this conference—because there is a sense in which this is the supreme conference of the history of mankind.

More nations are represented here than were ever represented in such a conference before. The fortunes of all peoples are involved. A great war is ended, which seemed about to bring a universal cataclysm. The danger is passed. A victory has been won for mankind, and it is delightful that we should be able to record these great results in this place.

But it is more delightful to honor France because we can honor her in the person of so distinguished a servant. We have all felt in our participation in the struggles of this war the fine steadfastness which characterized the leadership of the French in the hands of Mr. Clemenceau. We have learned to admire him, and those of us who have been associated with him have acquired a genuine affection for him.

Moreover, those of us who have been in these recent days in constant consultation with him know how warmly his purpose is set toward the goal of achievement to which all our faces are turned. He feels as we feel, as I have no doubt everybody in this room feels, that we are trusted to do a great thing, to do it in the highest spirit of friendship and accommodation, and to do it as promptly as possible in order that the hearts of men may have fear lifted from them, and that they may return to those purposes of life which will bring them happiness and contentment and prosperity.

Knowing his brotherhood of heart in these great matters, it affords me a personal pleasure to propose that Mr. Clemenceau shall be the permanent Chairman of this conference.

Clemenceau's Speech of Acceptance

Premier Clemenceau responded as follows:

You would not expect me to keep silence after what the two eminent statesmen, who have just spoken, have said. I cannot help expressing my great, my profound gratitude to the illustrious President of the United States, to the Prime Minister of Great Britain, and to Baron Sonnino for the words I have just heard from their lips.

Long ago, when I was young, as Mr. Lloyd George has recalled to you, when I was traveling in America and in England, I always heard the French reproached for an excess of courtesy, which sometimes went beyond the truth. As I listened to the American statesman and to the English statesman I wondered whether they had not caught in Paris our national disease of courtesy. Nevertheless, gentlemen, I must say that my election is necessarily due to the old international tradition of courtesy to the country which has the honor to receive the Peace Conference in its capital.

I wish also to say that this testimony of friendship, if they will allow to me the word, on the part of President Wilson, and Mr. Lloyd George in particular, has touched me deeply, because I see in it a new strength for all three of us to accomplish, with the co-operation of the entire conference, the arduous work which is intrusted to us. I gather from it a new confidence in the success of our efforts.

President Wilson has special authority to say that this is the first time in fact that the world has ever seen assembled together a delegation of all the civilized nations of the earth.

The greater the bloody catastrophe which has devastated and ruined one of the richest parts of France, the greater and more splendid must be the reparation—not only the material reparation, the vulgar reparation, if I dare speak so, which is due all of us, but the higher and nobler reparation of the new institution which we will try to establish, in order that nations may at length escape from the fatal embrace of ruinous wars, which destroy everything, heap up ruins, terrorize the populace and prevent them from going freely about their work for fear of enemies which may rise up from one day to the next.

It is a great, splendid, and noble ambition which has come to all of us. It is desirable that success should crown our efforts. This cannot take place unless we have all firmly fixed and clearly determined ideas on what we wish to do.

I said in the Chamber a few days ago, and I wish to repeat here, that success is not possible unless we remain firmly united. We have come together as friends, we must leave this hall as friends.

That, gentlemen, is the first thought that comes to me. All else must be subordinated to the necessity of a closer and closer union among the nations who have taken part in this great war and to the necessity of remaining friends. For the League of Nations is here. It is yourself. It is for you to make it live, and to make it live we must have it really in our hearts.

As I told President Wilson a few days ago, there is no sacrifice that I am not willing to make in order to accomplish this, and I do not doubt that you all have the same sentiment. We will make these sacrifices, but on the condition that we endeavor impartially to conciliate interests apparently contradictory, on the higher plane of a greater, happier, and better humanity.

That, gentlemen, is what I had to say to you. I am touched beyond words at the evidence of good will and friendship which you show me.

The program of this conference has been laid down by President Wilson. It is no longer the peace of a more or less vast territory, no longer the peace of continents; it is the peace of nations that is to be made. This program is sufficient in itself. There is no superfluous word. Let us try to act swiftly and well.

BOURGEOIS WOULD BAR GERMANY AT FIRST

Tells What Must Be Done to Qualify Her for League Membership.

PARIS, Jan. 17.—The admission of Germany to the League of Nations is the subject of considerable discussion in Peace Conference circles. While they are as yet academic, some interesting views have developed.

In the opinion of Leon Bourgeois, the French authority on the League of Nations, the league for the present must be composed exclusively of the associated nations and those neutral States which since 1917 have adhered to the rules of the Second Hague Peace Conference and who have during the war strictly obeyed the obligations of international rights. Later, M. Bourgeois feels, Germany may prove her title to membership.

"It is the free peoples who have fought for justice and right who must lay the unshakable foundations of the edifice of a League of Nations," said M. Bourgeois to The Associated Press, "and who must in a spirit of perfect and mutual trust promulgate its laws, determine the guarantees, and shoulder its obligations."

"Ought Germany, then, not form a part of the league?" he was asked.

"This is a very difficult problem, on which opinions differ," he replied. "My own opinion is that a League of Nations tends to become universal, but, owing to the very object which we are trying to achieve, it can only be instituted among free nations which are true to their word, which have discharged all obligations incurred through previous faults, and which are ready to give all the guarantees which are legally and materially necessary. Germany can join the league when she fulfills all these."

OUTLINES CONGRESS WORK

Clemenceau Says It Will Fix War Responsibility—Has Opinions on the Kaiser's Guilt.

NOMINATED BY WILSON

Glowing Tributes to the French Premier by the President and Lloyd George.

PARIS, Jan. 18, (Associated Press.)—The Peace Congress, on which the eyes of the world are now centred, was opened this afternoon in the great Salle de la Paix of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The proceedings, which were confined to the election of Georges Clemenceau, the French Premier, as permanent Chairman of the conference, an address of welcome by the President of the French Republic, Raymond Poincaré, and speeches by President Wilson, Premier Lloyd George, and Baron Sonnino, were characterized by expressions of lasting friendship and the apparent determination of the representatives of the various nations to come to an amicable understanding with respect to the problems to be decided by the conference.

M. Clemenceau's acceptance of the Presidency of the congress was both a feeling expression of personal gratitude and an outline of the great questions immediately ahead. Three of these larger general subjects he defined as responsibility for the war; responsibility for crimes during the war, and international labor legislation. The League of Nations, he said, was at the head of the program for the next full session.

"Our ambition is a great and noble one," said M. Clemenceau. "We wish to avoid a repetition of the catastrophe which bathed the world in blood. If the League of Nations is to be practicable we must all remain united. Let us carry out our program quickly and in an effective manner."

Referring to the authors of the war, he said he had consulted two eminent jurists on the penal responsibility of the former German Emperor, and each delegate would receive a copy of that report.

As the delegations arrived they were greeted by fanfares of trumpets, and military honors were accorded by the troops. The Japanese were among the earlier arrivals, and were followed by the Siamese and East Indians in picturesque turbans.

President Wilson's arrival at 10 minutes to 3 was the signal for a demonstration from the crowds. The President passed into the antechamber where M. Pichon, the French Foreign Minister, awaited him, and conducted him to the council room.

Already the chamber was crowded with delegates, who greeted President Wilson warmly as he passed toward the table of honor. Here he was joined by Secretary Lansing, Mr. White, and General Bliss, and exchanged greetings with the British and many other delegates.

Just at 3 o'clock a ruffle of drums and blare of trumpets announced the approach of President Poincaré. He was escorted by the group of Premiers to the head of the table, while a hush fell upon the assemblage as the moment arrived for the opening of the Congress.

It was exactly three minutes past 3 when M. Poincaré began his address, and the Peace Conference came into being. The entire assemblage stood as the French President spoke. President Wilson stood immediately at his right and listened attentively. M. Poincaré spoke in an earnest but easy manner, without declamatory effect, and, according to usage, there was no applause or interruption.

He spoke in French, and when he had concluded an interpreter read the Presidential discourse in English.

As M. Poincaré closed he turned to receive the congratulations of President Wilson and Premier Lloyd George, and then withdrew, saluting each delegation as he retired.

As M. Poincaré made his exit President Wilson rose to propose M. Clemenceau as permanent Chairman of the conference. He spoke in a conversational voice, which, however, carried throughout the chamber as he paid eloquent tribute to the French Premier.

Lloyd George's Tribute to "Tiger."

Mr. Lloyd George seconded President Wilson's motion in these words:

"I count it not merely a pleasure, but a great privilege, that I should be expected on behalf of the British Empire delegates to support the motion of President Wilson. I do so far the reason which he has so eloquently given expression to—as a tribute to the man. When I was a schoolboy Mr. Clemenceau was a compelling and a conspicuous figure in the politics of his native land, and his fame had extended far beyond the bounds of France.

"Were it not for that undoubted fact, Mr. President, I should have treated as a legend the common report of your years. I have attended many conferences with Mr. Clemenceau, and in them all the most vigorous, the most enduring, and the most youthful figure there has been that of Mr. Clemenceau. He has had the youthfulness, he has had the hopefulness and the fearlessness of youth. He is, indeed, the 'Grand Young Man' of France, and I am proud to stand here to propose that he should take the chair in this great conference that is to settle the peace of the world.

"I know of none better qualified, or as well qualified, to occupy this chair than Mr. Clemenceau. And I speak from my experience in its claim. He and I have not always agreed. We have very often agreed. We have sometimes disagreed, and we have always expressed our disagreements very emphatically because we are ourselves.

"But, although there will be delays, and inevitable delays, in the signing of peace, due to the inherent difficulties of what we have to settle, I will guarantee from my knowledge of Mr. Clemenceau that there will be no waste of time, and that is important.

"The world is thirsting and hungering for peace. There are millions of people who want to get back to the world work of peace. And the fact that Mr. Clemenceau is in the chair will be proof that they will get there without any delays which are due to anything except the difficulties which are essential in what we have to perform. He is one of the great speakers of the world, but no one knows better than he that the best speaking is that which impels beneficent actions.

"I have another reason. During the dark days we have passed through his courage, his unfailing courage, his untiring energy, his inspiration have helped the Allies through to triumph, and I know of no one to whom that victory is more attributable than the man who sits in this chair. In his own person, more than any living man, he represents the heroism, he represents the genius, of the indomitable people of his land.

"And for these reasons I count it a privilege that I should be expected to second this motion."

Baron Sonnino, the Italian Foreign Minister, added Italy's tribute, whereupon the election of M. Clemenceau as permanent presiding officer was effected unanimously.

In a feeling address M. Clemenceau acknowledged the honor conferred upon him. He turned first to President Wilson and bowed his thanks, then to Mr. Lloyd George for the tribute he had paid him. It was not alone a tribute to him, he said, but to France.

"Must Leave This Hall as Friends."

"We have come together as friends," he exclaimed. "We must leave this hall as friends."

Referring to the League of Nations, M. Clemenceau declared it was already in the way of being achieved by the gathering of this conference.

He then turned to the program of the conference, which he said covered the following main subjects of general order: First, responsibility of the authors of the war; second, responsibility for the crimes committed during the war; third, legislation in regard to international labor.

All the powers represented, he said, would be invited to present memoranda on these three questions. The powers having particular interests, M. Clemenceau continued, would be asked to present further memoranda on territorial, financial, and economic questions.

"The League of Nations will be placed at the head of the order of the day of the next full session," M. Clemenceau announced. He then paused for further suggestions of business, and, as none was made, he declared the session adjourned.

It was 4:30 o'clock, and the opening session had lasted exactly one hour and a half. No exact time was fixed for the reassembling of the full session of the conference, as that awaits the call of the Supreme Council of the five Great Powers, which will probably meet Monday morning.

In all seventy-two seats were provided for the opening session of the conference. On the outer side of the great horseshoe were arranged the Japanese, the British and colonial delegates and the seat of the fifth British delegate. A chair for the fifth American delegate was also reserved immediately to the right of the table of honor.

The Italian, Belgian, Brazilian, Cuban, Haitian, Peruvian, Portuguese, Serbian, Czechoslovakian, and Uruguayan delegates sat in the order named. Across at the left wing of the table sat the Siamese, Rumanian, Polish, Liberian, Hedjaz, Guatemalan, Ecuadorean, Chinese, and Bolivian delegations.

All preparations had been completed at an early hour for the holding of the first formal session.

The Salle d'Horloge, now rechristened the Salle de la Paix, and one of the most splendid reception rooms in Europe, had been placed in readiness for the delegations of the nations as they entered to begin the sittings of the full congress, the entire chamber having been rearranged for the special purpose to which it is now being put.

First to catch the eye of the plenipotentiaries entering the hall was a statue of Peace holding aloft the torch of Civilization. This heroic marble figure stood directly behind the chair of Premier Clemenceau.

In front of the statue was spread the council table, covered with the traditional green baize of diplomacy. This table is in the form of a huge horseshoe. Across the upper end are nine seats of honor, for the presiding officer, the Vice Presidents, and Premiers. On each side of the two arms of the horseshoe there are fifteen seats, making sixty seats, besides the nine at the head of the table.

Each delegate's chair is upholstered in bright red leather, and before each place is a complete equipment of writing materials. The fittings of the room are in white and gold, with a frescoed ceiling bordered by dancing Cupids. Four great lustre chandeliers hang from the ceiling, while five large windows, looking out over the Seine River, cast a flood of light over the sumptuous apartment.

Leading from the council room is another large chamber overlooking the gardens. To this room the delegates can retire for consultations.

Further on was a gorgeous state dining room, where luncheon and dinner may be served to the delegates in case protracted sessions are held. The whole suite of rooms is suggestive of elegance and beauty and the artistic taste of the French.

The Foreign Office was the centre of interest from an early hour this morning as the crowds gathered, and the final preparations were made for the opening of the Peace Congress. Bright skies greeted the plenipotentiaries for the first time in a fortnight, sunshine and a bracing air succeeding the weeks of rain.

Along the Quai d'Orsay the crowds awaited the appearance of the delegates and gazed at the tall windows of the Salle de la Paix, where the congress was about to meet. Toward midday the troops called out for the occasion began to take their assigned positions fronting the Palais Bourbon and the Foreign Office, with a guard of honor drawn up in the court leading to the entrance to the Foreign Office. The guard took the form of a double file of soldiers through which the delegates were to pass.

ASSAIL COMMUNIQUES ON PEACE CONFERENCE

London Newspapers Say They Are Drawn in Such a Way as to Kill All Interest.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 18.—The London newspapers this afternoon carry hardly any Conference news and confine themselves strictly to the communiqués. They continue their protests at the press restrictions and agree generally with the Westminster Gazette in its statement that the "Peace Conference has made a thoroughly sad start in attempting to hide its proceedings from the public behind a veil of soulless communiqués."

These same communiqués have come in for a good deal of criticism as being so far drawn in such a way as to kill all interest in the Conference. It has been pointed out that the very announcement limiting the press is obscure, for it is not clear what it meant by the word "authorized." If it is intended that only the official statements are to be published, it is argued here, it means a reimposition of the censorship in the severest form the very day after its abolition was announced. If it doesn't mean that, no newspaper would ever have asked that its correspondents' dispatches be "authorized."

The official statement concerning the system of representation at the Conference is also being pilloried as all that communiqués should not be.

The Westminster Gazette admits the difficulties connected with the full publication of the Conference proceedings and the danger that differences of opinion may be exaggerated, but it declares that the "risk must be taken and the good sense and loyalty of the press must be relied on."

It argues that we live in a democratic age, and it would be absurd if the people whose future happiness is at stake, after the sacrifice of war, should be compelled to accept the final arrangements as accomplished facts.

Even The Evening Standard, which still maintains an isolated support of the Conference's action, lays stress on the need of fullness and frankness in such official reports as are published, but speaks of the grave mischief which might arise from the delegates giving their own versions of debates. It says:

"Already we have had an example. President Wilson was represented in an American paper as having declared that 'if certain demands were not conceded he would leave Paris and withdraw all the American troops from France. Millions of American citizens must have read this report and believed there was something in it.' Yet when President Wilson's attention was called to the matter by Premier Clemenceau, his sole comment was, 'What an abominable lie.'"

The Star, on the other hand, pins its faith on the American press. After declaring that Wilson is determined to secure publicity, it suggests that it may be necessary to get our news via New York, for our censor would not venture to sit on the American wire to London. What the Americans get in the way of publicity we must also get. The argument for publicity is unanswerable. Fresh air is safer than foul air. Open windows are more healthful than closed windows, freedom is manlier than fumes, fog and fug.

FEW FULL SESSIONS LIKELY.

Representatives of 5 Great Powers Will Decide When to Hold Them.

PARIS, Jan. 18.—With the assembling of the first full session of the Peace Congress today the prospects of the notable assemblage of statesmen making rapid progress with its work seem enhanced by the apparent defeat of Bolshevism in Germany, which may open the way to the stabilizing of the Government and enable it to send responsible representatives to the Conference.

The Congress is expected to devote itself single-mindedly to the creation of a League of Nations. A study of the methods by which the League can be organized will be committed formally to an inter-allied commission, sitting contemporaneously with the Congress, which will present the result of its labors for ratification at the end of the Congress.

All questions at issue, of whatever kind, will be settled before the enemy delegates arrive, the Allied Ministers recognizing the vital importance of presenting an unbroken front to the enemy. As regards Russia, it is stated that the five leading powers have agreed that her representation by any Russian element is impossible for the moment. It is argued that the admission of ex-Premier Lvoff or any other man who figured in previous Russian Governments, might give the Bolsheviki a chance to declare that the Powers were supporting a monarchical régime.

As to the other questions before the Congress, territorial, financial and economic, the order of their consideration will be indicated in the rules of procedure to be read by Premier Clemenceau as President of the Congress. It is understood that the method of work will be such that each delegation will record its opinion on each question in a memorandum which it will hand to the general secretariat. The five Great Powers, the organizers of the Conference, will deliberate on these memoranda, either making a decision at once or inviting the delegates of the countries especially affected by the question at issue to come and discuss it with them.

Thus the twenty-five representatives of the Great Powers will act, in a way, as the arbiters of the conflicting claims of the small nations.

By this method there will be few plenary sittings, there being no reason for holding them except when the question is one of ratifying an entire category of decisions affecting the assembled States as a whole, and, above all, when the future organization of the world, that is to say, the question of the League of Nations, is dealt with.

Poincare Welcomes Makers of Peace of Justice; Lauds America's Coming and Work of Wilson

PARIS, Jan. 18.—The greeting of the French Republic to the members of the Peace Conference was extended at the opening session this afternoon by President Poincaré, who in his address praised the unselfishness of the American Republic in entering the world war and assumed the intention of the congress to establish a League of Nations.

President Poincaré's speech was as follows:

"Gentlemen: France greets and thanks you for having chosen as the seat of your labors the city which for more than four years the enemy has made his principal military objective and which the valor of the allied armies has victoriously defended against unceasingly renewed offensives.

"Permit me to see in your decision the homage of all the nations that you represent toward a country which more than any other has endured the sufferings of war, of which entire provinces have been transformed into a vast battlefield and have been systematically laid waste by the invader, and which has paid the human tribute in death.

"France has borne these enormous sacrifices, although she had not the slightest responsibility for the frightful catastrophe which has overwhelmed the universe. And at the moment when the cycle of horror is ending all the powers whose delegates are assembled here may acquit themselves of any share in the crime which has resulted in so unprecedented a disaster. What givee you the authority to establish a peace of justice is the fact that none of the peoples of whom you are the delegates has had any part in the injustice. Humanity can place confidence in you because you are not among those who have outraged the rights of humanity.

Germany's Guilt Clearly Shown.

"There is no need of further information or for special inquiries into the origin of the drama which has just shaken the world. The truth, bathed in blood, has already escaped from the imperial archives. The premeditated character of the trap is today clearly proved.

"In the hope of conquering first the hegemony of Europe and next the mastery of the world the Central Empires, bound together by a secret plot, found the most abominable of pretexts for trying to crush Serbia and force their way to the east. At the same time they disowned the most solemn undertakings in order to crush Belgium and force their way into the heart of France.

"These are the two unforgettable outrages which opened the way to aggression. The combined efforts of Great Britain, France, and Russia were exerted against that man-made arrogance.

"If, after long vicissitudes, those who wished to reign by the sword have perished by the sword, they have but themselves to blame. They have been destroyed by their own blindness. What could be more significant than the shameful bargains they attempted to offer to Great Britain and France at the en dof July, 1914, when to Great Britain they suggested: 'Allow us to attack France on land and we will not enter the Channel,' and when they instructed their Ambassador to say to France: 'We will only accept a declaration of neutrality on your part if you surrender to us Briey, Toul, and Verdun.' It is in the light of these things, gentlemen, that all the conclusions you will have to draw from the war will take shape.

"Your nations entered the war successively, but came one and all to the help of threatened right. Like Germany, Great Britain had guaranteed the independence of Belgium. Germany sought to crush Belgium. Great Britain and France both swore to save her. Thus from the very beginning of hostilities there came into conflict the two ideas which for fifty months were to struggle for the dominion of the world—the idea of sovereign force, which accepts neither control nor check, and the idea of justice, which depends on the sword only to prevent or repress the abuse of strength.

"Faithfully supported by her dominions and her colonies, Great Britain decided that she could not remain aloof from a struggle in which the fate of every country was involved. She has made, and her dominions and colonies have made with her, prodigious efforts to prevent the war from ending in the triumph of the spirit of conquest and the destruction of right.

"Japan, in her turn, only decided to take up arms out of loyalty to Great Britain, her great ally, and from the consciousness of the danger in which both Asia and Europe would have stood of the hegemony of which the Germanic empires dreamed.

"Italy, who from the first had refused to lend a helping hand to German ambition, rose against an age-long foe only to answer the call of oppressed populations and to destroy at the cost of her blood the artificial political combination which took no account of human liberty.

"Rumania resolved to fight only to realize that national unity which was opposed by the same powers of arbitrary force. Abandoned, betrayed, and strangled, she had to submit to an abominable treaty, the revision of which you will exact.

"Greece, whom the enemy for many months tried to turn from her traditions and destinies, raised an army only to escape attempts at domination of which she felt the growing threat.

"Portugal, China, and Siam abandoned neutrality only to escape the strangling pressure of the Central Powers.

Tribute to American Republics.

"Thus, it was the extent of German ambitions that brought so many peoples, great and small, to align themselves against the same adversary. And what shall I say of the solemn resolutions taken by the United States in the Spring of 1917, under the auspices of its illustrious President, Mr. Wilson, whom I am happy to greet here in the name of grateful France and, if you will allow me to say so, gentlemen, in the name of all the nations represented in this room?

"What shall I say of the many other American powers which either declared themselves against Germany—Brazil, Cuba, Panama, Guatemala, Nicaragua, Haiti, Honduras—or at least broke off diplomatic relations—Bolivia, Peru, Ecuador, Uruguay. From the north to the south the New World rose with indignation when it saw the empires of Central Europe, after having let loose the war without provocation and without excuse, carry it on with fire, pillage, and the massacre of indffensive beings.

"The intervention of the United States was something more, something greater than a great political and military event. It was a supreme judgment passed at the bar of history by the lofty conscience of a free people and their Chief Magistrate on the enormous responsibilities incurred in the frightful conflict which was lacerating humanity.

America's Defense of Free Ideals.

"It was not only to protect itself from the audacious aims of German megalomania that the United States equipped fleets and created immense armies, but, also, and above all, to defend an ideal of liberty over which it saw the huge shadow of the Imperial Eagle encroaching further every day. America, the daughter of Europe, crossed the ocean to rescue her mother from the humiliation of thralldom and to save civilization.

"The American people wished to put an end to the greatest scandal that has ever sullied the annals of mankind. Autocratic Governments, having prepared in the secrecy of the Chancelleries and the General Staffs a mad program of universal dominion, let loose their packs at the time fixed by their genius for intrigue and sounded the horns for the chase, ordering science (at the very time it was beginning to abolish distances, to bring men closer together and make life sweeter) to leave the bright sky toward which it was soaring and to place itself submissively at the service of violence, debasing the religious idea to the extent of making God the complacent auxiliary of their passions and the accomplice of their crimes—In short, counting as nought the traditions and wills of peoples, the lives of citizens, the honor of women, and all those principles of public and private morality which we for our part have endeavored to keep unaltered throughout the war, and which neither nations nor individuals can repudiate or disregard with impunity.

Rising of Oppressed Nations.

"While the conflict was gradually extending over the entire surface of the earth the clanking of chains was heard here and there, and captive nationalities from the depths of their age-long jails cried out to us for help. Yes, more, they escaped to come to our aid. Poland came to life again and sent us troops. The Czechoslovaks won their right to independence, in Siberia, in France, and in Italy. The Jugoslavs, the Armenians, the Syrians and Levantines, the Arabs, all the victims, long helpless or resigned, of the historic deeds of injustice—all the martyrs of the past, all the outraged in conscience, all the strangled in liberty—viewed the clash of arms and turned to us as their natural defenders.

"The war gradually attained the fullness of its first significance and became in the full sense of the term a crusade of humanity for right, and if anything can console us, in part at least, for the losses we have suffered it is assuredly the thought that our victory is also the victory of right. This victory is complete, for the enemy only asked for the armistice to escape from an irretrievable military disaster.

"In the interest of justice and peace it now rests with you to reap from this victory its full fruits. In order to carry out this immense task you have decided to admit at first only the allied or associated powers, and, in so far as their interests are involved in the debates, the nations which remained neutral. You have thought that the terms of peace ought to be settled among ourselves before they are communicated to those against whom we have fought the good fight.

"The solidarity which has united us during the war and has enabled us to win military success ought to remain unimpaired during the negotiations for and after the signing of the treaty.

A Congress of Free Peoples.

"It is not only the Governments, but the free peoples, who are represented here. To the test of danger they have learned to know and help one another. They want their intimacy of yesterday to assure the peace of tomorrow. Vainly would our enemies seek to divide us. If they have not yet renounced their customary manoeuvres they will soon find that they are meeting today, as during the hostilities, a homogeneous block which nothing will be able to disintegrate. Even before the armistice you reached that necessary unity under the aid of the lofty moral and political truths of which President Wilson has nobly made himself the interpreter, and in the light of these truths you intend to accomplish your mission.

"You will, therefore, seek nothing but justice—justice that has no favorites, justice in territorial problems, justice in financial problems, justice in economic problems. But justice is not inert, it does not submit to injustice.

"What it demands first, when it has been violated, is restitution and reparation for the peoples and individuals who have been despoiled or maltreated. In formulating this lawful claim it obeys neither hatred nor an instinctive or thoughtless desire for reprisals. It pursues a twofold object—to render to each his due and not to encourage crime through leaving it unpunished.

"What justice also demands, inspired by the same feeling, is the punishment of the guilty and effective guarantees against an active return of the spirit by which they were prompted, and it is logical to demand that these guarantees should be given, above all, to the nations that have been and might again be most exposed to aggression or threat, to those who have many times stood in danger of being submerged by the perioclictide of the same invasion.

Dream of Conquest Banished.

"What justice banishes is the dream of conquest and imperialism, contempt for national will, the arbitrary exchange of provinces between States, as though peoples were but articles of furniture or pawns in a game. The time is no more when diplomatists could meet to redraw with authority the map of the empires on the corner of a table. If you are to remake the map of the world it is in the name of the peoples, and one condition is that you shall faithfully interpret their thoughts and respect the right of nations, small and great, to dispose of themselves and to reconcile with this the equally sacred right of ethnical and religious minorities—a formidable task which science and history, your two advisers, will contribute to assist and facilitate.

"You will naturally strive to secure the material and moral means of subsistence for all those people who are constituted or reconstituted into States, for those who wish to unite themselves to their neighbors, for those who divide themselves into separate units, for those who reorganize themselves, for those who divide themselves according to their regained traditions, and, lastly, for all those whose freedom you have already sanctioned or are about to sanction. You will not call them into existence only to sentence them to death immediately because you would like your work in this, as in all other matters, to be fruitful and lasting.

Call for a League of Nations.

"While introducing into the world as much harmony as possible, you will, in conformity with the fourteenth of the propositions unanimously adopted by the great allied powers, establish a general League of Nations which will be the supreme guarantee against any fresh assault upon the rights of peoples. You do not intend this international association to be directed against anybody in the future. It will not, of a set purpose, shut out anybody, but, having been organized by the nations that have sacrificed themselves in the defense of right, it will receive from them its statutes and fundamental rules.

"It will lay down conditions concerning present or future adherence, and, as it is to have for its essential aim the prevention as far as possible of the renewal of wars, it will, above all, seek to gain respect for the peace which you will have established and will find it the less difficult to maintain in proportion as this peace will in itself imply the greater realities of justice and safer guarantees of stability.

"By establishing this new order of things you will meet the aspirations of humanity, which, after the frightful convulsions of the blood-stained years, ardently wishes to feel itself protected by a union of free people against the every possible revival of primitive savagery. An immortal glory will attach to the names of the nations and the men who have desired to co-operate in this grand work in faith and brotherhood and who have taken the pains to eliminate from the future peace causes of disturbance and instability.

"This very day forty-eight years ago—on the 18th of January, 1871—the German Empire was proclaimed by an army of invasion in the Château at Versailles. It was consecrated by the theft of two French provinces. It was thus a violation from its origin and, by the fault of its founders, it was born in injustice. It has ended in oblivion.

"You are assembled in order to repair the evil that has been done and to prevent a recurrence of it. You hold in your hands the future of the world. I leave you gentlemen to your grave deliberations and declare the Conference of Paris open."

probable that Great Britain would be forced to defend herself by special laws.

In Asia Minor, notably in Arabia and Mesopotamia, Great Britain has certain commitments. In Arabia the people asked her for protection against the Turks and requested that they be not left under Ottoman control. Assurances of protection were given by Great Britain. The expedition into Mesopotamia was due partly to the same condition, it is added. In this part of the world there are French, Italian, British, Russian, and Turkish interests to consider. Great Britain is prepared for an amicable adjustment with her Allies and expects the League of Nations to act as a steadying power.

As far as Arabia is concerned, Great Britain will be largely guided by the wishes of the inhabitants. Arabia was recently recognized as a sovereign belligerent power, and Great Britain desires the principle of self-determination to work itself out as far as possible in these districts. Undoubtedly, it is said, she expects to supervise affairs in some parts of Arabia, and this is also true of Mesopotamia, where Great Britain is represented as feeling that she should hold the rudder.

The question of the Bagdad Railway must be disposed of, and whether it be regarded as a State railway or not is a matter for the Peace Conference to decide. Much of this railway was built with what might be called cosmopolitan money, and Germany did not have the share in its construction that many attributed to her, it is claimed. A part of the railway may be internationalized, it is suggested, but the part toward the Persian Gulf, terminating at Basra, should, it is felt, remain in British hands.

The presence of delegates from India at the Peace Conference has its significance in connection with the disposition of Mesopotamia. Should the Peace Conference approve, it is possible that the greater part of this territory would be placed under the supervision of the Indian Government.

In considering the return of the German colonies it is declared, the interests and desires of the British Dominions must be taken into account. Australia is deeply interested in the disposition of the German islands south of the equator and close to Australia. Up to the time of the signing of the armistice, it is said, Germany talked of retaining the Bismarck Archipelago. Australia is said to oppose the return of these islands which might give Germany airplane and submarine bases. The general feeling is declared to be that these islands should come under the control of Great Britain.

In the Far East Great Britain wants nothing except the assurance of stable administrations and the maintenance of the open door policy. Her affairs in the Far East, it is said, must be considered in conjunction with Japan and China. Great Britain is naturally interested in such matters as the future relations of China with Germany in view of England's settlements in China like that about Shanghai.

The welfare of the natives must be consulted in any adjustment of the African question. As far as Southwest Africa is concerned the South African Government at Cape Town, it is said unofficially, will demand its retention. Premier Botha and General Smuts are both in Paris, and their attitude in favor of the incorporation of this region in the South African Union has been made plain.

In German East Africa the claims of Great Britain, it is pointed out, cannot be considered apart from those of Portugal and Belgium. India also is interested, and then the French claims in Africa must be considered.

The feeling in British circles is that Germany has made a mess of her trust in the African colonies, and the natives do not want to be returned to Germanic influence. There must be a revision of the treaties of 1885 concerning the partition of the Congo Basin, it is held, because these can no longer stand.

It is possible that the United States will be asked to co-operate with Great Britain in the trusteeship in Africa outside of German Southwest Africa. Great Britain, it is said, does not want to carry the burden of the administration of Africa by herself.

GERMANS INSIST ON LIMITED TERMS

Declare They Will Not Go Beyond the Wilson Peace Program.

DEMAND COLONIES BACK

Scheidemann, It Is Now Said, Will Head Delegation with Brockdorff.

BASLE, Jan. 18.—The German Government, according to a dispatch from Berlin, has appointed Count von Brockdorff-Rantzau, the Foreign Minister, and Philipp Scheidemann as the heads of the German delegation to the Peace Conference. The Government has drawn up lines of policy which the German delegation "must follow."

The delegation, the dispatch says, will oppose the demands of the Allies which go beyond the program outlined by President Wilson. It will seek the immediate suspension of all economic measures against Germany.

The German Government, according to the dispatch, will declare through the delegates its readiness in common with other States to disarm on land and sea and in the air. Germany, it is declared, has realized already the greater part of her disarmament under the terms of the armistice and it is alleged that this fact renders unjustifiable the retention of her men as prisoners by the Allies.

The Berlin dispatch further says that Germany will demand the return of her colonies. Germany will recognize the principle of the right of self-determination, which it holds should be applied to Germany as it was before the war, especially as regards Alsace-Lorraine. The delegates will support the creation of a League of Nations in accordance with the proposals of President Wilson.

AMSTERDAM, Jan. 16.—The German Cabinet, at its sitting yesterday afternoon, discussed the preparations for the Peace Conference, and will probably tomorrow issue a communiqué setting forth the principles it will represent.

According to the Rhenish Westphalian Gazette, the German delegates will be led by Prince Lichnowsky, supported by Count Brockdorff-Rantzau, Foreign Minister, and Karl Kautsky, the greatest exponent of theoretical Socialism in Germany.

BOLSHEVIKI ASK ENTENTE AMNESTY

Want Crimes Overlooked and Confiscation Recognized—Anti-Red Protests in Petrograd.

LONDON, Jan. 18.—Foreign Minister Litvinoff of the Russian Bolshevist Government has made several proposals on behalf of the Soviet régime, through the medium of a friendly emissary, for the opening of peace negotiations with the Entente, according to The Evening Standard today.

"None of these propositions has been substantial enough to receive serious consideration either in Paris or London. The main conditions of the Bolsheviki are that their régime be maintained intact, with amnesty for all crimes committed in their name, and that their confiscation of property and money be recognized as lawfully enacted measures.

COPENHAGEN, Jan. 18.—According to a dispatch to the National Tidende, big mass demonstrations have taken place in Petrograd against Bolshevist rule, which is getting weaker in Russia.

"There seems to be a prospect that the anti-parties will succeed in getting the better of the proletarian dictatorship.

BOLSHEVIST ARMY RETIRES IN ESTHONIA

Executed 305 Persons in Dorpat Before Leaving and 170 in Wesenberg.

LONDON, Jan. 18. (British Wireless Service.)—The Esthonian General Staff reports that the Bolsheviki are rapidly retiring toward Pskov, 160 miles southwest of Petrograd.

The mouth of the Narova River, which flows between the Governments of Petrograd and Esthonia, has been occupied by the Esthonians. According to a communication from Reval, the Bolsheviki, before giving up Dorpat, Livonia, shot 225 men and 80 women. Among those executed were the chief orthodox Bishop of Esthonia and four Lutheran pastors. The number of persons shot at Wesenberg, Esthonia, before the Bolsheviki fled, exceeded 170.

WHY CABINET RESIGNED.

Rome at Last Announces Resignation of Entire Ministry.

ROME, Jan. 18.—An official note says today, says:

"Since the conclusion of the armistice and following a discussion in the Chamber and the vote on credits the Ministers have thought it well to place their portfolios at the disposal of the Premier for a reconstruction of the Cabinet.

"The events which followed and the absence of Premier Orlando delayed the plan, which was taken up at a Cabinet meeting held last Wednesday."

WILSON'S INDEMNITY IDEAS.

British Back Him in Making Foes Pay Damages Only.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 18. — The Morning Post's Paris correspondent says:

"President Wilson, in his speeches and statements of policy, has always favored payment by Germany for the damage caused by war, but he seems quite unwilling to acquiesce in any imposition of an indemnity in addition. In this he has the more or less tacit support of the English delegation."

The same correspondent says he has every reason to believe that the conference has no intention of discussing the question of the freedom of the seas, and adds:

"Since it was reserved in the first instance, it would appear that Wilson has accepted the reservation and has not the intention to go further into the question."

TROOPS MASSED TO GUARD VOTING

the Deutsche Volkspartei or German People's Party. Both former Conservative Parties, with a reinforcement from the right wing of the Liberals, now form the Deutsche National Volkspartei, or German National People's Party. The old Catholic Centrists, discarding all traditions, have allied themselves with certain religious organizations of other denominations under the name of the Christliche Volkspartei.

The Deutsche Demokratische comprises certain elements belonging to the old National Liberal, old Freisinnige, and old Progressive Parties. The Majority Socialists and the Independent Socialists are the remaining parties.

The communists and other more or less anarchistic groups are not participating in the elections, at least not as voters, however active they may prove to be in another sense.

Women Voters Outnumber the Men.

The six parties named are not the only factors to be reckoned with; there is the unknown quantity of the women's votes. Of 40,000,000 Germans entitled to vote, 18,000,000 are males and 22,000,000 females.

"Think what we could do with the men if we were properly organized and so minded," said Frau Cauters to THE TIMES correspondent when he visited the woman who for many years was the principal spirit in the German movement for woman suffrage. "We could vote the old men out of office and run the Government entirely ourselves."

Frau Cauters hastened to assure me that the German women had no such intentions and that various women's campaign organizations, of which about half a dozen with branches are spread all over parts of Germany, were not working for any distinctive women's party. They have simply tried their best to enlighten the female citizens as to the respective merits of the parties.

Asked about the number of female candidates, Frau Cauters thought that there were nearly 200. Some would probably be dropped before the elections, but she thought that some twenty might be elected, the latter mostly belonging to the Deutsche Demokratische Partei and the Socialists.

The enormous predominance of woman voters, Frau Cauters explained, is due to the losses in war, but even before the war the female German population surpassed the male by about 1,000,000.

The German newspapers, though intensely interested in the campaign, seldom venture to speculate on the result of the elections.

Socialists Fear Losses.

The Socialists, it is expected, will not have the overwhelming majority which they might have had if the elections had taken place before the second revolution. The Government's vacillating attitude and indulgence of criminals against the public safety has lost the majority Socialists much sympathy. They themselves feel this.

"Had the elections taken place two weeks ago," said a well-known member of the Government to THE TIMES correspondent, "we would have returned with a majority large enough to form a purely Socialist Government. Now we shall probably have to form an alliance with the Deutsche Demokratische Party, which may come out second best.

The Independents, to judge from the South German results, will hardly get more than 3 per cent. of the popular vote, and will count no longer. Their leaders, Haase and Dittmann, foreseeing the ruin of their party, have tried to save it by forming a new party, named the United Socialist Parties.

"They wish to eliminate the members compromised by sympathy with the Spartacides and other anarchists and to fill the gaping ranks with certain elements from the Majority Socialists, whom they hove to allure by high-sounding phrases. This manoeuvre might lead to the complete wrecking of the Socialist cause, but we shall see that it does not succeed.

The Deutsche Demokratische Party is sparing neither money nor energy, and employs perhaps the most modern methods. It is considered to be pretty certain to share in the future Government with the Majority Socialists.

The Pan German Deutsche Volkspartei and Deutsche Nationale Volkspartei both profess for the present to adhere to a republican form of government, but some of their speakers at recent meetings have proclaimed openly amid "thunderous applause" that they hoped the time would come when German Kaiserdom would be assured again of its old splendor.

These parties have only a small following in Berlin. Their strength is in the eastern provinces, where, however, for the first time, they are strongly opposed by Socialist candidates who are working hard among the peasants and laborers.

Recognizing the danger, they have called out all the old war horses, Heydebrandt, Westarp, and many others with names odious to all German ears except those of the Junkers.

Even Dr. Helffrich, who fled to Switzerland, has returned and is now stumping Pomerania in the interest of the reactionary parties. He has already experienced some very unpleasant receptions, even in that reactionary stronghold, and would not dare show his face in Berlin or South Germany.

The results of the South German elections have considerably dampened the expectations of the Christliche Volkspartei, which hoped for a much larger vote. It seems that the war caused many young men to lose faith in this party, as may be proved by the result in their stronghold, the Rhenish Provinces. It is estimated, based on results in the State elections, that over 90 per cent. of the persons entitled to vote will do so.

CANNOT FIND BODY OF ROSA LUXEMBURG

This Is One of Several Unsolved Mysteries About Berlin Tragedy.

BERLIN, Jan. 17. (Associated Press.)—At a late hour tonight the whereabouts of the body of Rosa Luxemburg continued to be a puzzling feature of the tragedy of Wednesday. The military authorities are still investigating the action of the commanding officer assigned to the motor car which was supposed to carry the woman to the Moabit Jail, and which halted just long enough to permit a stranger to jump on the running board and fire the fatal shot, after which other persons rushed up, seized the body, and disappeared.

The date of the burial of Dr. Liebknecht has not yet been fixed, but it was stated today that the dead leader would not be buried in Berlin. It is not unlikely that any attempt to make his funeral the pretext for a big demonstration would meet with prompt opposition by the military government, which for the present is prohibiting all street parades.

The city has been so garrisoned with new troops as to discourage the Spartacides from attempting any propaganda at this time.

With the death of the leaders, the Red Flag also disappeared from the list of Berlin's revolutionary journals. It was floated in the early weeks of the revolution by Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg as the official organ of the German Bolsheviki, for which purpose Russian rubles were available in conspicuous profusion. The Red Flag's editorial rooms have been occupied by Government troops. Herr Meyer and Herr Marcusson, co-editors with Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg, have fled.

The Socialist newspaper Vorwärts, while condemning the lynching of the Spartacide leaders, also sees in their death the natural result of the victims' appeal to the lowest passions and violence.

While the Independent Socialists of Bavaria and other parts of Germany are endeavoring to consolidate the two Socialist parties independent of Greater Berlin, in their two newspapers they appeal to the workingmen for a general strike as a protest against the "domination of military anarchy." The appeal calls on the workmen to protest against the Government, "which disarms the workmen and arms unenlightened troops, officers, and students against the workmen," and closes: "Down with the Ebert-Scheidemann Government."

Spartacide rioters are causing disorder in various parts of Germany. A number of them today attacked the Hotel Viegner at Breslau, where the campaign bureau of the German Democratic Party was situated. After demolishing the interior they attempted to set the hotel on fire, but were dispersed by Government troops.

Five Spartacide leaders identified with the recent rebellion in Spandau were shot dead last night while attempting to escape.

Five-Day Republic Falls.

The Bolshevist Republic of Cuxhaven has collapsed after an existence of five days. The end came as a result of the failure of the Spartacide rulers to answer an ultimatum from citizens, teachers, and State and national officials, who threatened a strike. Work stopped completely at the expiration of the assigned period.

After a mass meeting the citizens visited the headquarters of the Soldiers' and Workmen's Council and compelled the Council to revoke its decree establishing a republic.

The workmen in the Essen district are beginning to revolt against the efforts of the Spartacides to compel strikes. At several places, including Krupps, attempts to cause strikes resulted in the agitators being attacked by the enraged workmen.

At Duisburg the Spartacides demanded that the Government be turned over to them. The demand was refused, and they were then disarmed and ejected from the plant of the Volksstimme, which they had occupied. Order again prevails there.

Brunswick and Hanover Clash.

Jan. 16—Systematic search for Spartacides continues. Especially strong forces have been posted in sections most exposed to Bolshevist snipers in recent days, and citizens are warned to keep indoors at night.

Hanover dispatches report a clash between the authorities of the majority Socialist government and the Spartacide and Independent Socialist government in Brunswick. The Soldiers' and Workmen's Council, which in connection with the Brunswick State Government has been using all means to prevent the dispatch of troops to protect Germany's eastern border, gave notice that any troops passing through Brunswick railway stations would be disarmed. The Hanover Council thereupon sent strong forces, which occupied a railway station in Brunswick territory.

The Brunswick Council protested, saying that this act was "provocation to bring bloodshed and battle to the free States of Brunswick." The Hanover Council replied that all Brunswick troops belonged to the 10th Army Corps of Hanover.

Former Spartacide War Minister Schreiner of Stuttgart is reported arrested, with fifteen others of his group. The Spartacide coup at Stuttgart is reported to have cost seven lives.

The Executive Committee of the Central Soldiers and Workmen's Council has telegraphed to councils at Mülheim-am-Ruhr, Hamburg, and other places requesting that the councils order their own immediate reconstitution by new elections carried on by the proportional system. The Central Committee says that conditions at a number of places require this action.

A dispatch from Appeln says that the negotiations between the coal miners and the operators, which were being conducted by Herr Herch, Prussian Minister of the Interior, came to an abrupt ending because of the exorbitant demand of the workers. The meeting was very stormy, the conservative element among the miners being terrorized by Spartacide agitators who were well supplied with money and Bolshevist literature printed in Polish.

LONDON, Jan. 18.—Independent Socialists at Berlin assert that Dr. Karl Liebknecht, who was shot and killed on Thursday, did not attempt to escape from an escort of troops, but was shot through the forehead at a few paces distance by soldiers guarding him, according to a Copenhagen dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company.

"Liebknecht and Luxemburg fell as victims of their own terrorist tactics," said Philip Scheidemann in a speech at Cassel today.

NONSOCIALIST VOTE UNITING IN GERMANY

Gen. von Maltzhahn Advises Royalists to Support the Centrist Candidates.

By EDWIN L. JAMES.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COBLENZ, Jan. 17.—The greatest reason for believing that when the German National Assembly gets into operation it will turn out a safe and sane product is the fact that elements opposing the Socialists are showing increasing signs of co-operation without any expectation of reviving the monarchy.

Now come the out-and-out Royalists, advocating support of the Centrist or Catholic Party ticket as their ticket. Any one who in the old days pictured politicians who had tied up with Prussian royalty voting the Centrist ticket would have been laughed at. Yet Major Gen. von Maltzhahn urges the Royalists to hurry and choose between the lesser of two evils and support the Centrist ticket as the best way to curb the Social Democrats.

The Centrist ticket is the same as that of the German Popular Party, which is Democratic, as the Centrists now call themselves a Democratic Party. With Protestant churchmen joining the Centrists, the prospects of that party are looming brighter, as recent elections show.

General von Maltzhahn does not conceal the fact that he is not enthusiastic over voting any Democratic ticket, but he observes that if every one who feels that way stays away from the polls it will "help the Social Democrats and them only." His appeal to the Royalists says in part:

"Many voters, who are, like myself, stanch monarchists, will be unable to reconcile themselves to voting for a Democratic Party, but will be glad to vote the German National ticket, even though the slate of that party is also that of the Democratic Party.

"The number of voters of both sexes having monarchical sympathies in Germany is much larger than is generally supposed. In consequence of the impression of terror occasioned by the violent upheaval and assumption of control by the Social Democracy, with its Soldiers' and Workmen's Councils, those who are so inclined have not yet turned up to acknowledge that they still cling to the Kaiser and the empire.

"The pain and sorrow caused by the collapse of all that was lofty and sacred to us must not result in shy and silent self-restraint on our part, still less in our abstaining from voting on Jan. 19 and 26. By so doing we should be yielding our place to the Social Democrats without having made a fight.

"Let nobody hold back. Henceforth let every one acknowledge openly and freely in true German fashion his political opinions, his wishes, and his hopes. Just as every person who has attained full development has definite religious consciousness, so also must such a person have a definite political point of view.

"We who have the courage to avow openly our allegiance to Christianity—although those who have seen the light' regard this practice as out of date and contrary to the 'spirit of the times'—will still have courage to acknowledge aloud and in public that we are loyal Germans and cling to the house of Hohenzollern, our hereditary rulers, to whom Prussia and Germany are indebted for everything during the last 500 years.

"In openly avowing our feelings we are not doing enough. Reconstruction out of the wreck of the empire can only be set in motion by the energetic co-operation of all concerned. We desire no bloody counterrevolution, but we wish to make use of the right to the use of the ballot for the benefit of the candidate who will represent our political aspirations.

"You German men of Coblenz, Treves, and Birkenfeld election districts who cannot make up your minds to support directly the German Democratic Popular Party because the word 'democratic' is offensive to you, and you German women who are similarly disposed and who did not want the franchise right in the first place, you must not abstain from voting. Just because you are in your hearts monarchical and nationalistic you must vote on Jan. 19 and 26 with the German National Party, which is allied to the other middle class parties."

The American Army has allowed the free circulation of this appeal.

There is no evidence that the ex-Kaiser's friends are trying to get control of the Centrist Party and use its already great strength for the restoration of the monarchy. They simply think that they would get better treatment from a dominating Centrist Party than from a dominating Social Democracy.

FEAR OF A COUP PREYS ON EX-KAISER

Mysterious Visit of American Officers Is Still Being Investigated.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

THE HAGUE, Jan. 14.—The German ex-royalties are living in fear of a coup d'état. The Handelsblad reports that the object of the mysterious visit of American officers to Amerongen on Jan. 5 is still being investigated, and that suspicion of the visitors' intentions has not yet been allayed, so that the guards have been doubled at the castle.

A flying machine of unknown nationality, flying very high, circled over the castle last Saturday, making the ex-royalties still more uneasy.

Two military attachés from the American Legation at The Hague went to Amerongen to investigate the affair and stated to THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent that the report in the papers of an automobile containing American officers was accurate, although the officers were entirely unconnected with The Hague Legation.

AMERONGEN, Holland, Jan. 14, (Associated Press.)—William Hohenzollern's illness, which manifests itself principally in the form of chills, is being aggravated by his constant worry, the effects of which are plainly visible in his features and his general physical condition.

The former Emperor looks to be perhaps fifteen years older than when he crossed the frontier of Holland. Although he is only about to complete his sixtieth year, his birthday coming at the end of the present month, his appearance suggests a man of seventy. He now wears a short, grayish beard and a drooping moustache, and his hitherto firm flesh is sagging.

The guards around the castle are maintaining the strictest vigilance in consequence of the revival of rumors, which, however, do not seem to be well founded, that an attempt might be made to kidnap the ex-Emperor.

The ex-Emperor, who had always been accustomed to smoke a considerable number of cigarettes daily, has now become a greater consumer of tobacco than ever. As soon as one cigarette is finished he starts another, his smoking continuing virtually from the moment he rises until he retires.

Herr Hohenzollern's meals with his wife are of the simplest sort. Water is the only beverage taken at the table, but in the forenoon the ex-ruler drinks a small glass of light red wine and in the evening half a glass before going to bed.

The former Empress recently sent her chamberlain to Amsterdam over the week-end to order a birthday present for her husband.

BERLIN, Jan. 16, (via Copenhagen.)—Dr. Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg were arrested late last night and while being transported to the Moabit Prison were thrashed by infuriated people and shot like mad dogs, the latter by an unknown man whose pistol may have saved her from a worse fate.

It would be idle to pretend that the overwhelming majority of the German people are grieved by the fate of the two foremost extremist leaders. On the contrary, satisfaction with the turn things have taken is almost general.

There was a possibility of the Government fearing that if Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg were treated as pernicious criminals an insignificant though very troublesome part of the people would consider them martyrs for the cause of the proletariat and that for that reason they might be spared perhaps to do more harm even than before. Their end, however cruel, will certainly do much for the restoration of peace and order.

Police Shadowed Meeting.

The police, having kept a close watch on the Spartacide leaders in the last few days, had overheard several of them mention a meeting at the house of a member of the Workers' Council, Marcusson, in Mannheimerstrasse, Wilmersdorf, from which it was concluded that they would hold a war council there. At 8 o'clock the house was surrounded by military forces and police and searched.

Among others caught were two persons resembling Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg. Both, however, denied their identity.

Liebknecht was taken first to a Government post on Nickolsburger Platz. After a short examination, the officer in charge, fearing that Nickolsburger Platz might be attacked by Spartacides, sent Liebknecht in an automobile, strongly guarded, to the Eden Hotel in Kurfürstendamm. A cavalry division was in control of that part of the city.

Here Liebknecht was examined once more, but still denied his identity, insisting that his name was Marcusson. Letters addressed to Liebknecht and initials on his clothing he tried to explain by saying that the latter articles had been borrowed from a friend who had probably been intrusted with letters by Liebknecht.

He was then confronted by Frau Marcusson, who identified him as Liebknecht, whereupon he admitted the truth.

Mob Demanded His Death.

Meanwhile news of the arrest of Liebknecht spread like wildfire. A tumultuous multitude gathered in front of the hotel despite the late hour.

"Hand over the brute! Kill the swine!" howled the people, their yells penetrating to a large room on the first floor where Liebknecht was awaiting his fate.

Liebknecht smiled derisively, remarking to the soldiers on guard: "They would kill Jesus Christ Himself." He was very pale, but otherwise showed no fear.

The officer in charge, fearing violence, ordered one of the strongest and largest automobiles available to be drawn up at the side door of the hotel, through which Liebknecht was escorted. Somehow the people got wind of this and Liebknecht had hardly been seated in the car when he was surrounded by a wrathful mass howling "Kill him! Kill him!"

A dozen persons reached the car at the same time, and one of them hit Liebknecht on the head with a heavy cane. At this moment the car started and ruthlessly made its way through the masses trying to cling to it, but it pushed them away. It was chased for a block or two by the mob hooting and screaming.

Liebknecht Shot Twice.

The automobile's crew had orders to take Liebknecht by the safest way to the Moabit Prison, which was through the Tiergarten. There was an accident to the car in the Charlottenburger Chaussée, requiring considerable repairing.

It was then after 10 o'clock, very dark, and no vehicles were about. Liebknecht had been bleeding profusely, but had not lost consciousness. The soldiers asked if he could walk as far as Hofjaeger Alley, where possibly some vehicle might be found with which to continue.

Liebknecht asked that his handkerchief be bound around his head, whereupon he declared himself ready to walk. The party left the car in the midst of the meadow, but when they got under some trees, hardly a hundred yards distant, Liebknecht suddenly pushed into a ditch the soldier walking at his side and made a dash for a clump of bushes.

Three times the soldiers shouted, "Halt or you will be shot!" but Liebknecht sped on unheedingly. He had almost disappeared into the darkness when four rifles were fired and the fugitive dropped, two bullets having pierced his back.

There seemed to be some faint life left in him when he was examined, and a passing cab took the unconscious man to the nearest ambulance station. The physician on duty there found that he had died en route. The body was removed to the morgue.

Threats from Rosa Luxemburg.

Meanwhile Rosa Luxemburg and other Spartacide leaders had been arrested in the Marcusson House as they arrived one by one. Rosa arrived nearly an hour later than Liebknecht at the Eden Hotel. She protested furiously that she could only be arrested on the Government's warrant. She threatened unless liberated at once that the Spartacides would attack the hotel with heavy artillery.

The officer on duty at the hotel had received information that the crowds around the building were increasing every minute and assuming a very threatening attitude against the prisoner, while at the same time suspicious persons began to mingle, who doubtless sympathized with the prisoner.

"You hear them," said Rosa, referring to the yells in the street. "They've come to rescue me. Let me talk to them or take the consequences."

The officer said he preferred the latter. Having been made prudent by the reception that Liebknecht got from the people, he went below, shouting to the crowds:

"It's all over; you had better go home, because Rosa has left by the café door and is now safe in Moabit."

The officer then got into a waiting automobile, pretending to ride home. But two blocks below the car turned, speeding back to the hotel entrance. He rushed upstairs, where Rosa and five soldiers were waiting.

Before they reached the street, however, many hundreds of people returned, making a rush at Rosa as soon as she appeared at the portal.

Fought the Mob Furiously.

The officer tried to shield her with his outstretched arms, but he and his men were pushed aside and she was torn from them. She fought furiously, trying to escape into the hotel, but some half a dozen canes and umbrellas descended upon her head and she dropped unconscious.

The soldiers, having been reinforced, rescued Rosa and placed her in an automobile, which immediately bounded up the Kurfürstendamm. But the news of her arrest traveled faster than the car. All along the streets the people hooted and jeered.

Three blocks further a man jumped aboard and before the soldiers were aware of what had happened he fired a shot at Rosa, killing her. The car sped on despite the swarms of people trying to stop it. At Hitzigbridge the masses were so dense that it could not proceed.

"Neider, neider, neider mit Rosa," yelled the crowd, but a few strong voices cried: "Hoch, hoch, hoch." There was a tremendous rush, the soldiers feeling themselves swept away as if by a tidal wave, and before they recovered from their surprise Rosa's body had been snatched from the car and borne away into the darkness.

There are two versions explaining her extraordinary disappearance which was made possible only by the slight illumination of the Berlin streets, one being that the Spartacides made a daring attempt to rescue her when they believed she was still alive, and the other that the infuriated mob snatched the body, sinking it in a nearby canal, or a little lake in the Tiergarten.

Both of these were dragged for hours, but no trace of the body was found.

Military Governor Noske is conducting a sharp investigation, but it seems that the soldiers' conduct was faultless in both cases.

WANT US TO SHARE NEAR EAST PROBLEM

"Moral Monroe Doctrine" Proposed for Former Territories of Turkey.

WILSON WITH JUGOSLAVS?

Understood to Sympathize with Their Aspirations Along the Adriatic.

By WALTER DURANTY.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Jan. 18.—At the opening of the peace conference it is already abundantly clear that in addition to the two great world problems presented by Russia and Germany there exist two other questions whose satisfactory settlement is likely to be a matter of considerable difficulty owing to international differences of opinion and the fact that both cases are complicated by previous agreements.

These questions are the disposition of the former Austrian territory on the Adriatic and the former Turkish territory in the Near East.

As regards the Adriatic, it was accepted in principle by France, Great Britain, and Russia that Italy should be given the eastern coast with its islands, as the price of her entry into the war in 1915. At the same time, provision was made that the Serbo-Croatian peoples of the interior who are united under the title of Jugoslavs should be given an outlet in the shape of a port on the Adriatic.

Various events, however, have brought about a modification of this agreement. The most notable was America's participation in the world conflict, after the acceptance by the Entente in January, 1917, of President Wilson's principles, according to which the right of peoples to dispose of their own destiny should be undisputed.

That immediately and vitally affected the Adriatic question because it is beyond question that along large portions of the eastern coast the great majority of the population is Jugoslav and by race is strongly opposed to Italian domination.

Tense Situation at Fiume.

In the last few weeks matters have come to a head around Fiume, where conditions at one moment were so acute that allied and American military and naval units were rushed thither to prevent the opposing parties from actually coming to blows. The Italians, whose vigorous nationalism finds its champion and expression in their aggressive Foreign Minister, Sonnino, assert that, first, the population of Fiume is overwhelmingly Italian, and secondly, that its occupation by any one else renders Italy's position in the Adriatic no less precarious than before the war.

As regards the town itself, the Italian claim is fairly just, but at the same time it is equally true that within a radius of twenty miles around Fiume the Jugoslavs outnumber the Italians in the proportion of nearly ten to one.

As far as self-protection is concerned it would seem that Italy, one of the great European powers, in possession of Trieste and possibly Pola, would have little to fear, even should a League of Nations not become a practical entity to avert war, from the comparatively minor Jugoslav confederation.

It is an open secret that President Wilson is in sympathy with the latter, and the general feeling both in France and England is that the Italian policy savors too much of that vexatious attitude of self-seeking imperialism which has caused so many conflicts in the past and which the new spirit of international co-operation for the common welfare is trying to eliminate.

Difficulties in the Near East.

The case of the Near East is somewhat parallel, here, too, we find a "secret treaty" among Great Britain, France, and Russia in 1916, which parceled out the whole "heritage of the Turk" from the Black Sea to the Persian Gulf in accordance with the wishes of these three powers irrespective of the populations concerned. By that treaty Russia was given the northern regions, Britain the southern, and, true to the best principles of "buffer areas," and "the balance of power," France was accorded the intermediate area comprising, roughly, Southern Armenia and Syria as far as the Persian frontier on the east and down to the port of Saint Jean d'Acre on the coast.

Now in this immense territory there are three distinct populations with claims to dispose of themselves, the Armenians, Jews, and Arabs, and a fourth, the Syrians, whose somewhat heteregenous elements are united by the general bond of Christianity.

The suggestion has been made, and is understood to have been favorably received in England, that America should be asked to establish a sort of moral doctrine over the whole of the Near East with the possible exception of Mesopotamia, which the British would administer, and Arabia, whose King would remain Britain's ally.

Seek Reliance on America.

Nothing more than the weight of America's prestige and certainly that of America's strength behind it to say "hands off" to any aggression would be needed, it is urged, to insure the free development of national life in Armenia, Syria, and Palestine, whose populations desire independence, yet realize that they are none of them strong enough to stand alone without at least the moral support of a great power.

THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent was received a few days ago by Boghos Nubar Pacha, head of the Armenian National Committee in France, who spoke in the warmest terms of the charitable aid given to his martyred countrymen by America during the war. He added that although it was the dearest wish of the inhabitants of Cilicia and the six northern vilayets or districts extending as far as Trebizond on the Black Sea that they should form an independent Armenian State, they felt that some backing would be necessary either from a League of Nations or a single disinterested power.

He insisted on the fact that such backing need not, and, in his opinion should not, involve interference in the Government of Armenia, but that it should be confined to "warning off" instruction in various directions, such as the United States was fully competent and, he hoped, willing to give.

Nubar repeated more than once that what the Armenians want is not exploitation by any power or group of powers or a protectorate as ordinarily understood by them, but aid and a guarantee that they will be able to work out their own destiny without alien domination and interference.

Syrian Claims Extensive.

The position of the Jews is almost exactly similar. As for the Syrians, they make up in vociferation and the extent of their claims for any lack of coherent nationality. The Syrian Committee in France demands practically everything included in the zone assigned to France under the secret treaty of 1916. The fact that Adana and Southern Cilicia, which are unmistakably Armenian, to say nothing of the Arabian territory further south, form a part of that region nowise moderates the Syrian ardor.

The conference is likely to reduce the new Syrian State to modest limits, but may well accede to the Syrians' request that France be appointed their guardian, in view of the age-old ties, both religious and commercial, between France and that region.

Constantinople is expected either to be internationalized or placed under the guardianship of the League of Nations or a single disinterested power, the United States, for example, if the latter be willing. The program would apply to such districts of Asia Minor as may not be apportioned to Greece, whose claim to certain sections there by right of racial population is undeniable.

FOCH'S RHINE PLEA LINKS WITH LEAGUE

France Wants Not Annexation of Territory, but Full Security There.

LEAGUE COULD CONTROL

And Perhaps See That Germans Built No Forts Nor Assembled Munitions.

By EDWIN L. JAMES.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COBLENZ, Dec. 18.—The declaration by Marshal Foch to the American correspondents that the Germans must be in future years held on the Rhine represents one demand that the French will make in any plans for a League of Nations.

What Marshal Foch said may be construed to mean that if ever in the future Germany decides to make a move in the direction of France she must start from behind the Rhine, which means, of course, that she could not again attack France over night, and that if she moved toward France the first battles at least would take place on German soil between the Rhine and the French boundary.

Marshal Foch said that the Allies should insure, must insure, that the German military power must remain behind the Rhine.

"It is on the Rhine that we must halt the Germans," he said, meaning that the Allies should always be able to know that that was being done.

This, it is stated, links up with the League of Nations in this way: It is not meant that France should annex the Rhine provinces up to the Rhine. This territory could still remain an integral part of Germany. But those who agree with the Marshal assert that if the League of Nations plan is adopted there will be a necessity for an international police, and that it would be the duty of the international police or of some other League of Nations authority to see that all the decisions of the Peace Conference should be carried out, including any decision that Germany must keep all military machinery behind the barrier of the Rhine River.

Furthermore, it would be held that if the peace settlement imposed conditions upon any other nation it would be as permissible for the international authorities to examine into allegations of disobedience as it would be to inspect German activities along the Rhine.

It is suggested that some of the ways in which Marshal Foch's idea would be enforced would be to forbid Germany to have fortifications along the Rhine, or any guns, ammunition, or other military supplies west of the Rhine, or maintain any military establishment in that territory.

It is also advocated that no soldiers for the German Army should be raised from this region.

There are French statesmen who advocate the annexation of German territory up to the Rhine and others who would have a neutral State formed there. But from those close to the Marshal it is gathered that he would have his idea enforced through a League of Nations, providing a league was formed with power to enforce international regulations. Otherwise France would seek to find some other way to insure her safety.

Speaking as commander of all the allied forces, Marshal Foch spoke, perhaps as more than a Frenchman. That readers of THE TIMES may have his exact words on this subject, I give in French that portion of his statement referring to the Rhine. This has been read and approved by Marshal Foch:

"La barrière naturelle qui protégera la civilisation, c'est le Rhin. C'est sur le Rhin qu'il faut arrêter les Allemands. C'est en utilisant le Rhin qu'il importe des meutriers hors de l'état de recommencer le coup de 1914.

"Le Rhin, c'est la barrière commune de tous les Alliés, de tous ceux qui présentement se content unis pour sauver la civilisation; le Rhin, c'est la garantie de la paix pour tous les peuples qui ont versé leur sang pour la cause de la liberté. Donc veillons sur le Rhin!

"Nous n'avons pas l'idée d'attaquer l'Allemangne et de recommencer la guerre. Les démocraties comme les nôtres n'attaquent jamais. Elles ne demandent que vivre en paix et à se développer en paix. Mais qui nous dit que l'Allemangne—donc les idées démocratiques sont récentes et peut-être fort superficielles—ne se relevera pas rapidement de sa défaite et dans fort peu d'années ne tentera pas une deuxième fois de nous écraser?

"La Russie est hors de combat pour longtamps. L'Angleterre a la Manche à traverser. L'Amérique est loin.

"La France doit être en mesure de sauvegarder les interets généraux de l'humanité. Ils se joignent sur le Rhin. C'est là qu'il importe leur organizer pour éviter des surprises douloureuses dans l'avenir."

To some Marshal Foch's idea carries with it tremendous significance for the whole world, not so much in what it means of itself, as what it signifies. It would seem that one might read in it the development of an internationalism which means what nationalism meant for smaller States composing the integral nations, what the development of the community meant for the individuals composing that community.

Individual interests are supreme only until they interfere with the interests of neighbors. Then international interests will be sovereign only until they interfere with the interests of the world.

Marshal Foch's statement, translated into English, reads:

"The Rhine is the natural barrier which will protect civilization. The Germans must be stopped on the Rhine; and it is by the use of the Rhine that we can prevent them from being in a position to renew the attack of 1914. The Rhine is the common bulwark of all the Allies, of all those who have joined to save civilization; the Rhine is the guarantee of peace for all the peoples who have shed their blood for the cause of liberty. Then let us keep watch on the Rhine.

"We have no intention of attacking Germany and beginning the war again. Democracies such as ours never attack; they ask nothing but to live in peace and develop peacefully. But who can say that Germany—whose ideas of democracy are recent and perhaps quite superficial—will not rise rapidly from her defeat and in a very few years will not try a second time to destroy us?

"Russia will be incapacitated for a long time. England is on the other side of the Channel. America is far away. France should be in a position to safeguard the general interests of humanity. It can be done easily on the Rhine. It is there that measures should be taken to prevent the possibility of disastrous surprises in future."

HONORS ALLIED OFFICERS.

Baker Decorates Five Foreign Military Attaches.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18. — Secretary Baker, acting for President Wilson, formally presented the Distinguished Service Medal to five allied officers in recognition of their services to the United States Army today. The officers decorated were Major Generals James D. McLachlan, British Military Attaché; Emilio Guglielmotti, Italian Military Attaché, and John E. W. Headlam, chief of the Artillery Mission in the United States; Major Leon Oetterieth, acting Belgian Military Attaché and chief of the Belgian Military Mission, and Brig. Gen. Louis Collardet, French Attaché.

The Secretary also decorated sixteen American officers to whom the medal was awarded for services at the War Department.

Two civilians, S. M. Felton, Director of Military Railways, and Robert J. Thorne, assistant to the Acting Quartermaster General, were among those decorated.

Mine is Sunk Off the Maine Coast.

PORTLAND, Me., Jan. 18.—Captain E. C. The Lake Buckeye slowed down to warn the steamship Island, and Captain Robert Hudgkin of the Island sunk the mine with shots from a high-powered rifle. Another large mine was sighted off Fire Island by the crew of the Lake Buckeye.

MILWAUKEE'S MAYOR SILENCED BY JEERING

Hoan, Who Supports Berger, Compelled to Stop Speaking at Reception to Soldiers.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Jan. 18.—When Mayor Daniel W. Hoan attempted to speak tonight at a reception given by the city to returning soldiers, he was greeted with prolonged jeering at the conclusion of which he yielded to Governor E. L. Philipp of Wisconsin, who addressed the gathering.

Feeling against the Mayor has become intensified since last Sunday night, when he presided at a meeting which indorsed Victor L. Berger and his co-defendants, recently found guilty in a Federal court of violation of the Espionage act. Army officers here have been particularly vehement against the Mayor, and yesterday a committee of officers waited upon him and requested him not to preside at the reception. He told the committee he expected to be present.

Tonight the Mayor appeared at the Auditorium, where the reception was held, half an hour before the soldier and sailor guests arrived, marching in military formation. Mingled cheers and hisses greeted his first appearance. After the soldiers had marched around the hall they stood at attention and the Mayor arose to make his address. He was unable to speak for several minutes because of prolonged jeering, after which, without saying a word, he motioned to Governor Philipp to take the floor.

Mayor Hoan issued a statement late today in which he denied approving a doctrine of violence, one of the things said to have been indorsed at the Socialist meeting last Sunday and to which the army officers took exception

MANN OPPOSITION GAINING STRENGTH

House Republicans Drifting Toward Gillett and Longworth for the Speakership.

FESS STILL IN THE RACE

Cooper Issues Statement Urging Election of Ohio Man—Hays Taking a Hand.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—Opposition to James R. Mann for Speaker of the House became stronger today when Representative John S. Cooper of Ohio issued a statement urging Republicans to support Representative Fess for the place.

This move must be taken in connection with other events which have been happening in the last few days. Will H. Hays, Chairman of the Republican National Committee, has been canvassing the situation and has found strong sentiment in the Republican Party against the election of Mr. Mann.

Mr. Cooper's statement is in part as follows:

"Last Fall the Republican Party, through its press and its speakers, attacked most vigorously the old time seniority rule that has made the organization of Congress so defective and inefficient in the past. In the organization of the next Congress our party must not break faith, and should select men for the responsible position of leadership by reason of their qualifications, and not by reason of seniority. I trust the Republicans will look this question squarely in the face.

"I represent one of the greatest manufacturing districts in the country. My people have no concern regarding the patronage I will get, but they do demand that I shall use my best efforts to see to it that men of the highest qualifications are placed at the head of important committees.

"In regard to the selection of Speaker I am fully convinced that no one could be selected who would be better fitted and qualified than Hon. S. D. Fess."

Opposition to Mr. Mann is believed to be centring upon Representative Gillett or Representative Longworth. The latter has gained much strength as a compromise candidate for Speaker in the last ten days. He appears to have won the support of men from Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, and Wisconsin. While Mr. Fess is also from Ohio it is understood that their candidacies are friendly and that in due time, if it is seen that Mr. Longworth is the stronger, Mr. Fess will withdraw in his favor.

Mr. Mann has sixty of the 238 Republican members-in the next House pledged to him.

OCEAN RATES WILL BE CUT.

This Will Follow Writing Off of Cost of Our Shipping.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—Early action toward carrying out the proposal to write off about 30 per cent. of the war cost of American shipping was forecast today in official quarters and at the same time it was said that this step would be followed by a Shipping Board order sharply reducing existing freight rates in American bottoms.

This policy, under which it is intended to charge to profit and loss nearly a billion of three billions, which merchant craft in this country cost to build during the war, was formulated by Chairman Hurley of the Shipping Board, now in France.

It was said today that some action, or at least some announcement, might be expected next week. Officials say that with the approval of President Wilson there is no doubt about the board's authority to make it without appealing to Congress for new legislation.

The program also contemplates the possibility of a similar "writing off" of costs by shipyards, all of which paid vastly increased prices for every extension and added facility during the war. This and other phases of the question will be discussed at the conference of shipping interests to be held here Wednesday and Thursday.

Dinwiddie Quotes Laws to Show Secretary of State's Certificate Is Unnecessary.

PLAN TO PRESERVE BREWERY

Ruppert Expects Beer to Come Back Within Three Years—Rental Loss from Prohibition.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—That the prohibition amendment to the Federal Constitution will take effect one year from the date of its ratification by Nebraska, the thirty-sixth State, on Jan. 16, and not one year after the Secretary of State issues a proclamation declaring that three-fourths of the States have ratified the amendment, is the view held by Edwin C. Dinwiddie, National Legislative Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League and Allied Temperance Organizations, and other prohibition leaders.

"I hold this view," said Mr. Dinwiddie today: "First, because the Constitution, which is all controlling, specifically says in Article V. that amendments properly proposed by Congress shall be valid, to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States.' If it had been intended that the incorporation of an amendment into the Constitution should not be complete until the Secretary of State should so announce, Article V. would have contained a clause following the one just quoted, like this: 'And upon the proclamation thereof by the Secretary of State.'

"Secondly, the Secretary of State, as will be seen by reference to Section 205 of the Revised Statutes, is simply charged with the duty of proclaiming the fact of ratification. His act is not needed to complete the ratification. All amendments and previous proclamations announcing the adoption of amendments to the Federal Constitution have not attempted to fix the day on which they have become valid, but have simply announced the fact that they have become valid as part of the Constitution.

"Section 205 R. S. reads:

"'Whenever official notice is received at the Department of State that any amendment proposed to the Constitution of the United States has been adopted, according to the provisions of the Constitution, the Secretary of State shall forthwith cause the amendment to be published in the newspapers authorized to promulgate the law with his certificate, specifying the States by which the same may have been adopted, and that the same has become valid, to all intents and purposes, as a part of the Constitution of the United States.'

"Third, in the proclamations of the Secretary of State, care has been taken to name in one paragraph the States which have ratified up to the number of three-fourths of all the States, and the following paragraph proclaims the fact of such proportion to the whole number of States in the Union; and when additional States beyond the required three-fourths have ratified the amendment, this fact has been set forth in additional paragraphs in the proclamation. The proclamation itself follows the law of Congress in Section 205, R. S., just quoted, and simply states that the amendment has become valid and in no wise has attempted to fix the date. The reasonable theory is that this date is absolutely fixed by Article V. of the Constitution itself."

Mr. Dinwiddie insists that there is no basis for the claim of the liquor men that this amendment must be submitted to a vote of the people of the twenty-two States which have some form of referendum.

"Without going into the question exhaustively," he said, "there are two overmastering reasons why a referendum under State laws cannot be had on the vote of a State Legislature ratifying an amendment to the Federal Constitution. There are two ways of submitting amendments to the Federal Constitution and also two ways by which they may be adopted. There is absolutely no way under our present Constitution for the people directly either to propose amendments or ratify them when proposed.

"The XVIIIth Amendment was proposed by Congress by the two-thirds vote required by the Constitution. Congress specified, as it could and must do under the Constitution, whether the ratification should be by the Legislatures of the States or by conventions in the States called for that purpose. It specified the Legislatures, as had been done in the case of the seventeen preceding amendments. It is absolutely beyond the power of any State to change the form of the amendment thus submitted by Congress or the method by which it shall be adopted. The States can ratify or reject as submitted, but they cannot add to or take from what Congress has proposed.

"The Constitution in Article V. says that amendments so submitted by Congress shall be valid, &c., 'when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States.' It is absolutely beyond the power of a State to attach another or supplemental condition to its Legislature's ratification of a Federal amendment by the requirement of a referendum to the voters of the State.

"Under the conditions and my view of the Constitution these efforts on the part of the liquor forces will not even delay for a day—much less defeat—nation-wide prohibition, though they may afford the retained legal lights of the traffic an opportunity to continue the milking process so long enjoyed and so reluctantly released."

Pin Faith on Future Beer.

George E. Ruppert, Vice President of the Jacob Ruppert Brewery Company announced yesterday that he felt confident that no more than three years would elapse before the manufacture of beer would again be allowed. Therefore, he said, his concern has decided to keep the plant intact, using it in the meantime for the manufacture of kumyss, a milk preparation.

"Today we are organizing a company known as the Kumyss Incorporated Company, of which concern Jacob Ruppert will be President and Dr. E. F. Brush Vice President," he added. "The preparation will be manufactured at the Ruppert Brewery plant immediately. Some new machinery will be installed, though most of the old brewery equipment can be used. We will keep all of our old employes and intend to start an extensive advertising campaign for the sale of the milk product."

Representatives of real estate interests said that in New York City about 10,000 stores, yielding $10,000,000 annually in rentals and upward of $6,000,000 in excise revenues to the city, would shut down within a year as the result of the prohibition amendment. Edward P. Doyle, Chairman of the Committee on City Budget of the Real Estate Board of New York, said:

"'It will mean a loss of $10,000,000, directly and indirectly, in rentals throughout the city, or a capital loss of $125,000,000, and an increase of taxes, through the abandonment of licenses, of $6,000,000. This will add between eleven and twelve points to the tax rate.

Frank Bailey, Vice President of the Title Guarantee and Trust Company, said he believed prohibition would have even a more serious effect in Brooklyn than in Manhattan. He felt sure that the depreciation of real estate from the dry law would be severe and continuous.

The assertion that Theodore Roosevelt was favorable to prohibition was made yesterday by Andrew B. Wood, Assistant Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League. He quoted the Rev. Ferdinand C. Iglehart, D. D., contributing editor of The Christian Herald, as saying "the Colonel expressed himself as favoring the amendment," and produced a letter, dated Dec. 19, 1917, the day after Congress took final action in submitting the amendment to the States, in which Colonel Roosevelt wrote Dr. Iglehart as follows:

"I thank you for your book and appreciate your sending it to me, and I wish to congratulate you on what has happened in Congress and the success that is crowning your long fight against alcoholism. The American saloon has been one of the most mischievous elements in American social, political, and industrial life. No man has warred more valiantly against it than you have, and I am glad that it has been my privilege to stand with you in the contest."

SHIP WHISKY AS MUSTARD.

Authorities Seek Men Here Who Packed Cases for Virginia.

Deputies from the office of William H. Edwards, Internal Revenue Collector for the Wall Street District, are scouring the city in search of two prosperously attired Southerners who are wanted to answer the charge of having attempted to smuggle ten cases of whiskey into Virginia, a dry State.

The would-be smugglers carefully laid plans went astray when one of the cases, bearing the label of a well known brand of mustard, fell from a truck in front of the Old Dominion Line pier, and scattered demijohns and bottles over the concrete pavement.

Samuel Armour, a truck driver, with ten cases labeled "Mustard" and assigned to N. S. Horton Company, Norfolk, Va., was about to drive out on the Old Dominion Line pier when one of the cases fell off the truck and revealed its contents.

In a very few minutes the glad tidings spread and there was a small-sized riot as the crowd fought for the precious stuff. Patrolman Carns, on duty on the pier, with considerable difficulty, scattered the fighting crowd after several bottles had disappeared, and then commandeered the truck and its contents, taking them and the driver to the police station.

Immediately the police and revenue agents started an investigation. Armour, the truckman, said that he received the ten cases from another truckman, and was paid $5 for his trouble. Revenue agents found this truckman, who said that he was employed by an importer at 427 West Broadway. This truckman said that while driving down West Houston Street he was stopped by two well-dressed men who spoke with a Southern accent, and asked if he would cart ten cases which were stored in a packing box factory at West and West Houston Streets. He got the cases, he said, and turned them over to Armour, who had a truckman's license to go on the pier.

Pursuing their investigations further, revenue agents interviewed the owners of the packing box factory, who said that one morning recently the two Southerners entered the yard and bought the ten packing cases, saying they would pack the stuff in the yard as they did not want to dirty the floor.

The only clear description of the men other than the Southern accent was that one of them wore a diamond of big proportions, and that both were well supplied with money.

Must Vote Again on Prohibition.

LANSING, Mich., Jan. 18.—The Michigan Legislature must again act upon the Prohition Amendment to the Federal Constitution, in the opinion of Secretary of State Vaughan, who ruled late today that failure of the Legislature to pass upon the exact wording of the resolution makes its ratification void.

Interference in Luxemburg Denied.

PARIS, Jan. 17.—At General Headquarters of the American Expeditionary Forces an official denial is made of the story printed in some American newspapers that the American Army en its entry into Luxemburg suppressed a movement directed against the existing Government. When the troops entered Luxemburg General Pershing issued a proclamation setting forth the reasons for the occupation, and assuring the inhabitants that the American Army would not interfere in the internal affairs of the duchy.

SEES NEED OF WARSHIPS.

Admiral Mayo Regrets Seeing Them Turned Into Transports.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 18.—Admiral Henry T. Mayo, commander of the American Atlantic fleet, speaking last night before the fourteenth annual Poor Richard Club Franklin Day banquet, questioned the wisdom of converting battleships into transports to bring men back from France.

"Armistice does not spell peace," he declared. "If this great war ends without difficulties following, it will be different from any other war, and we may need our battleships at any time. The idea that the only thing to do now is to get the boys back quick is all wrong.

"The matter is settled now and we must leave the direction of these matters to wiser heads than mine, but this making of the battleships over into transports I very much regret.

"If you knew how great a task it is to get a battleship prepared for war and to train and equip a crew you would know how terrible a blow it is to the navy to have two-thirds of the crews taken off the ships, and have them torn apart and sent to transporting soldiers."

3 Most Important Events for Boys Monday & Tuesday in the 40th ANNIVERSARY SALES

Our Annual

Boys' Wash Suit Event

JANUARY is the time that mothers buy three boys' wash suits for the price of two. Every mother who has had anything to do with Best & Co.'s wash suits knows their points of superiority, knows how they go into the wash and how THEY COME OUT, NOT A BIT THE WORSE IN COLOR OR IN SHAP

The fabrics are most carefully tested and the details of workmanship, such as wide seams, binding, durable waistbands, buttonholes, and buttons, are all so carefully made and of such dependable quality that the suits will only be discarded when they are outgrown.

For 40 years we have made Boys' Clothes. We know what styles are best and the assortments included in this event are wide.

Not only is new merchandise from regular stock offered, but broken sizes of our best assortments and discontinued styles and suits soiled in handling, all go into this collection.

Although the quantity of suits is large, our response to this advertisement is always so heavy that we advise an early selection by those who would provide their Summer supply at once.

Regular Best & Co. Children's Underwear

THERE are two very important reasons for Best & Co.'s children's undermuslins being the best in the world. They are made of finer quality and heavier muslins than most others, and they are cut larger to the size than any other standard make in the country.

Notwithstanding this and their perfect shape, it is possible for us to offer them at this time at less than the current price for inferior undermuslins for reasons that we buy in such large quantities.

These were purchases at last Spring's prices, when the materials were selling at from 25% to 30% lower than at present.

SHOWS POLICE HOW HE KILLED GIRL

O'Donnell, After Confessing to Riddell Murder, Goes Over the Ground.

CORROBORATES HIS STORY

Place Where, He Said, He Struck Her Down, Had Blood on Ground.

CIGARETTE BUTT FOUND, TOO

Man Now Held by the Police for Homicide Admits Having Had Epileptic Fits.

Patrick O'Donnell, 30 years old, a porter, of 67 Lexington Avenue, who was arrested near Yonkers on Friday and accused of the murder of the young stenographer, Miss Mary Elizabeth Riddell, at Richmond Hill last Wednesday, made a confession yesterday, according to the police, and then took the police over the scene of the crime, pointing out where he had attacked the 17-year-old girl and then indicating where he had left the body.

The police had found blood stains at the place where O'Donnell said that he had first struck the girl. He asserted that he committed the deed on an impulse of the moment, and had found near at hand a heavy piece of iron spring. He led the police further to show where he had dragged the body, and stopped at a certain point to say that he had thrown away a cigarette there. The police had found a half-smoked cigarette just at this spot.

Then he went on further into the lot where the body had been found, and pointed to the exact spot where he had left his victim. His familiarity with the scene made it certain that his confession was true, according to the police.

O'Donnell said that he had a wife and three children, 11, 5, and 3 years old, but that he had quarreled with his family. He asserted that he had parents living in Brooklyn, but had gone to visit them on the night of the murder, but found no one at their home and was wandering about aimlessly when he happened upon the young woman. Under questioning, O'Donnell said that he had once been in a home for epileptics.

Marks were found on the man's hands, which had apparently been inflicted by the teeth of the girl in her struggle to escape from him.

Patrolling along Tuckahoe Road, near Central Avenue, in the eastern outskirts of Yonkers Friday shortly after daybreak, Policeman Gilmartin noticed a tall gaunt man, with shoulders hunched up and hands thrust deep in the pockets of a shabby overcoat, striding along in the rain and muttering. Gilmartin caught up with the stranger and after a brief conversation decided to lock him up on a charge of vagrancy.

Police Lieutenant Dennis Cooper, before whom the man was arraigned yesterday, had just finished entering the early morning walker as Patrick O'Donnell, 30 years old, of 67 Lexington Avenue, a porter employed by the Waterman Fountain Pen Company, 40 Fletcher Street, Manhattan, when the prisoner mumbled something which the police said sounded like "I did it." Cooper had been requested to be alert for any clue to the man who murdered Miss Riddell.

Picking up a newspaper containing a photograph of the dead girl, Cooper suddenly thrust it in front of the prisoner and demanded: "Why did you kill that girl?" O'Donnell stiffened, but said nothing. Lieutenant Cooper then said he asked O'Donnell if he didn't know the girl, and, according to the police version, the man said:

"That is the girl I struck with the iron." O'Donnell, say the Yonkers authorities, then gave a fragmentary account of the killing. He was arraigned before City Judge Bleakley in Yonkers Court, while, responding to notification sent to Police Headquarters here, Assistant District Attorney Edgar M. Hazleton, Second Assistant District Attorney William F. Ryan, Police Captain Carey of the Homicide Bureau, and a score of detectives started for Yonkers.

His Story of Murder.

After Mr. Hazleton had questioned O'Donnell, he said the man volunteered to make a confession in writing. Excerpts from O'Donnell's signed statement as furnished by the Assistant District Attorney are:

"On Tuesday night, Jan. 14, I went to go to my father's home in DeKalb Avenue Brooklyn. On Wednesday morning at about 11 o'clock, having spent the night previous in walking about the streets, I got to my father's house. About noon I left, walked around the streets a little while, and then took a DeKalb Avenue car and obtained a transfer. I think I have the transfer in my pocket now—no, I guess I lost it. I took some trolley car to Richmond Hill, getting there about 6 o'clock. I walked around Richmond Hill toward a wooded parklike section and was walking up a street that had a cement sidewalk, when a girl dressed with a long coat and wearing a large, dark hat came walking along the same street toward me.

"I had found a piece of iron in one of the streets and I had it under my coat as the girl approached me. When I came to her I took the iron from under my coat ad hit her once on the head and she fell. Then I took her by the arms and pulled her into the park and hit her on the head again with the iron. I carried the iron with me when I pulled the girl into the park. I then left the body, took a trolley to Brooklyn, went over the Williamsburg Bridge. There I took a Third Avenue car intending to go home, but didn't."

The arrival of O'Donnell at the scene of the crime and his subsequent arraignment in the Richmond Hill police station possessed unusually dramatic features. When Mr. Hazleton, with O'Donnell, drove up to the place where Miss Riddell was struck down, a little knot of citizens stood on the sidewalk overlooking the vacant lot, still discussing the latest move of the case. It was in their presence, Mr. Hazleton says, that O'Donnell pointed out the various locations, all within a radius of 100 feet, that figured in the murder. After he had done this he fell into a fit.

When the automobile reached the police station a crowd of several hundred were massed about the entrance to the building. In some unknown manner word had spread through Richmond Hill that the murderer was being brought to the station house and hundreds flocked to the building. There were hisses and catcalls as O'Donnell was half lifted, half dragged from the car, but there was no display of open hostility toward him. With Assistant District Attorney Ryan supporting him on one side and Detective Krummel on the other he was hustled into the building and taken at once to the private office of Captain John Barnes, commander of the precinct. Policemen had to be sent outside to drive away those who persisted in staring through the windows in the hope of catching sight of the prisoner.

After Dr. Ballin had revived O'Donnell the latter was questioned about the iron bar that he said he hid under his coat before striking down Miss Riddell. He also told how he struck her a second time after carrying her into the lot.

"Would you know the bar again if you saw it?" he was asked.

"Of course I would," he replied.

"What's this?" asked Detective Caputo, drawing from behind his back a piece of iron which was picked up only a few feet from Miss Riddell's body. It is part of an old wagon spring. Caputo produced at the same time a thinner bar which was found in another part of the lot.

"It's that one," instantly replied O'Donnell.

The bar, when found, bore no blood stains, but this is due to the fact, the police believed, that Miss Riddell was struck over the hat which she wore. O'Donnell then described the clothes the girl had on when she met her death, the officers say. No description of these garments has been published at any time, but they declare he described her garments correctly. He readily identified the garments taken from the girl's body as those she wore when, as he insisted, he slew her. Asked for an explanation of his crime, he said:

"If I hadn't been drunk I never would have done it," he declared, according to his inquisitors.

"In my opinion we have the right man, and I do not believe that he is lying," declared Assistant District Attorney Hazleton last night. "O'Donnell knows too much about the murder to have gained his information from the newspapers, as we at first thought to be the case. The man knew things that had never been published. He is now under arrest on a charge of homicide, and will be arraigned in the morning."

Inquiry at the Waterman office where O'Donnell and his wife worked showed that on Wednesday they did not leave until 8:45 o'clock. Witnesses were found who said they saw O'Donnell at work during those hours when, according to his volunteered confession, he was in Richmond Hill. Investigating the transfer which O'Donnell said he lost, the police said that a similar ticket was picked up near where the body was found.

Wrist Watch Found.

Another development yesterday was the recovery of a wrist watch thought to have been worn by the girl when she was killed. Beyond stating that the watch had been found in a Bronx pawn shop and that the dealer had furnished a good description of the man who had pledged it, the police declined to give any details. It was ascertained, however, that none of the members of the Riddell family had been able to positively identify the timepiece.

Another attack on a young woman within a half a mile of the spot where Miss Riddell was murdered was reported to the Richmond Hill Station yesterday. The victim was Mrs. Dora Arnople, wife of Samuel Arnople, a fruit dealer, living at 519 Jerome Avenue, Morris Park, Queens. She was found unconscious on the front step of the home of William A. Sullivan, 1 Linden Place, on Friday night, when Sullivan got up to investigate the sound of a fall. When Mrs. Arnople was revived she said:

"I left my house intending to go to the store at the corner of Linden Place and Wicka Street. As I crossed the vacant lot opposite the store a tall man in a long black overcoat approached me and grabbed me by the arm. I struck at him and he struck me and threw me to the ground. I didn't scream: instead I got up and fought so that he ran away. The excitement made me shaky and I fell on Mrs. Sullivan's stoop."

First Deputy Police Commissioner John A. Leach announced last night that police dogs had been assigned to patrol the sparsely settled sections of Richmond Hill. Following issuance of the order construction of kennels was begun.

FINDS ENGINEER MURDERED.

Janitor Discovers Body in Victim's Thirtieth Street Apartment.

Winfield Scott Philhower, 58 years old, an electrical machinist and expert on time clocks, was found murdered in a rear parlor of his bachelor apartment in the Smithsonian Apartments, 148 West Thirtieth Street, at noon yesterday, by the janitor, who had noticed lights burning in the machinist's rooms. The body was lying on the floor, fully clothed, death having been caused by stabs in the head inflicted with a sword-bayonet, part of a collection of antique weapons which hung in the hall admitting to the back parlor.

Philhower had evidently defended himself against his assailant with an old fashioned policeman's leather blackjack, also a part of the wall collection. This was found on the floor, slashed in several places as if by the keen-edged bayonet. Things were topsyturvy in the room, but Captain Ward of the East Thirty-fifth Street Station found no evidence that the struggle had been carried on elsewhere in the apartment.

ALLIES TO ALLOT GERMAN SHIPS

Armistice Commission, and were the first civilian deliberations between the Germans and the representatives of the associated Governments since the conclusion of hostilities. They were marked by a less formal spirit than the strictly military deliberations of the Armistice Commissioners.

Edward N. Hurley, head of the American Shipping Board, presided over the sessions. Philip Heineken of the North German Lloyd Company was the leading figure in the German delegation of ten.

Marshal Foch planned to have the agreement drafted and signed at one short meeting, but the shipping experts found this to be impossible. Three meetings, lasting over midnight on Thursday and several hours into Friday, were necessary for the discussion of the details. Another meeting is planned to be held toward the end of the month.

To Furnish Coal and Stores.

The delegates of the associated Governments proposed that the Germans furnish the coal and the ships' stores. The Germans protested that this was impossible, specifying the lubricants particularly as something they were unable to furnish. It was finally arranged that the Germans should furnish the coal and the stores and take the steamers to ports designated by the Allies, who will then take them over and man them.

The Germans stated that the steamers were in condition for immediate service, having been kept in repair by the skeleton crews maintained aboard them during the war.

The agreement for the renewal of the German armistice signed by Marshal Foch, Admiral Browning and the German Armistice Commissioners on Thursday provided for the renewal of the armistice from time to time after the month for which the extension runs, until the conclusion of peace, subject to the approval of the allied Governments.

The terms of the renewal include a clause by which the allied command reserves the right to occupy that part of the Strasbourg defenses comprised by the forts on the eastern bank of the Rhine and a strip of territory from three to six miles beyond. Other clauses provide for the substitution for supplementary railroad material, fixed at 500 locomotives and 19,000 cars by the protocol of Dec. 17, by large quantities of industrial and agricultural implements, and give control of Russian prisoners in Germany to allied and associated delegates for repatriation. German headquarters at Berlin will act in collaboration with the allied and associated relief organizations in this phase of the work.

The naval clauses provide that all submarines must be turned over, including all submarine cruisers, mine layers, sweepers, salvage ships, and floating docks for submarines. They also stipulate that the building of all submarines must cease and those on the stocks must be dismantled or destroyed under allied supervision.

Germany undertakes to turn over all allied ships still detained in German ports. The clause providing that Germany shall place her mercantile marine at the disposal of the Allies in return for food supplies says that the agreement in no way affects the final disposal of those ships.

Foch Accepts Cry of "Famine."

Marshal Foch, according to The Matin, will immediately break off the armistice with Germany if the conditions of the armistice are not fulfilled. The allied Commander in Chief, the paper adds, does not believe that the Germans exaggerate when they cry "Famine." The situation of the populations of Austria and Prussia, the Marshal is quoted as saying, is near the starvation point.

Germany still possesses an army, the Marshal declared, but the Allies hold the Rhine, which constitutes a formidable strategical barrier. Marshal Foch is said to have declared that he did not believe that a Bolshevist invasion through Germany to France was possible.

The Allies have received formal assurance, it is declared in an official note, that on Dec. 1 there were no German prisons, fortresses, prisoners' camps, or any other place in which officers or soldiers of the Entente were kept shut up or from which they were forbidden to send news of themselves. Since the armistice no allied subject remains in prison, either as a penalty or to await trial.

The commander of the neutral zone east of the Rhine in the region of Duisburg, Rhenish Prussia, announces that allied troops will occupy the harbors and landing places on the right bank of the Rhine. Duisburg will be occupied by two companies of troops.

German Officials Protest.

BERLIN, Jan. 17. (Associated Press.)—Chiefs of departments in the German Government, and especially the Ministers of Commerce and of Trade, protest against acceptance by the German delegates of the latest armistice conditions, the fulfillment of which, they declare, "means for Germany the organized preparation of starvation."

The Minister of Commerce and Labor, according to the Tageblatt, declares that Germany will be unable to replace the agricultural machinery taken, because Germany lacks necessary metals, coal, and trained laborers. He says German agriculture will be crippled if the machines are delivered to the Allies.

The Boersen Courier says that Food Minister Wurm declared that he first learned of the conditions through the press, and that he could not accept responsibility for the consequences.

The Tageblatt asks in an editorial: "Where are justice and humanity which were to dictate peace? We behold always force, and only force, and the German people, after such great physical and mental sufferings, are delivered over to destruction."

GERMAN EYES ON AMERICA.

Expect Credits from Us and Many Want to Start Afresh Here.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

THE HAGUE, Jan. 18.—Discussing the question of Americans granting credits to Germany, the Frankfurter Zeitung reports that a member of the Armistice Commission who is in uch with Americans and who was with Hoover in Brussels said that the granting of foreign credits was looked upon skeptically in America. He said that the granting of such credits to Germany was under lively discussion, but there was at present a cooling off in the attitude toward Germany, which would compel the people to wait. If the Entente succeeds in putting through a program against the ideas of President Wilson, it is hardly to be assumed, says the newspaper, that American business men will want to do business with an enthralled Germany, even if involving little risk.

In the foreground of the whole discussion about Germany, continues the paper, is the future problem of emigration. Even today, it says, a big influx of experienced German workmen is counted upon in America, and the people are surprised that the question has not been discussed in Germany. America is represented as suffering from an increasing lack of workmen, as many Slavs are returning to Europe and there is still great opposition to the employment of coolies.

THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent learns that the question as to whether and how soon America will allow German citizens to enter the United States is already eagerly discussed in many circles in Germany. Many business men think America the only place to start afresh, and many wish to visit relatives in America.

GERMANS PREPARE TO RESIST POLES

PEOPLE APPEAL TO WILSON

Silesians Want President to Prevent Czech Invasion—Paderewski's Polish Ministry Popular.

BERLIN, Jan. 17. (Associated Press.)—The German Government is reported to be organizing two armies for the purpose of counteracting an invasion by the Poles, who already are threatening Brandenburg. Forces in West Prussia will be under the command of General von Quast, while an army in Silesia will be commanded by Field Marshal von Woyrsch.

Volunteers are joining the colors in great numbers at Koenigsberg to protect the boundaries of East Prussia from Bolshevist aggression and against the Poles.

Declaring that the eastern frontier will soon be lost unless the Germans awake to the danger, the Lokal-Anzeiger says: "The Poles have fallen upon our fellow-countrymen like vandals. They have proclaimed martial law and have utterly abolished German administration. Indications are that Bromberg will soon be in possession of the Poles."

The newspaper declares that 800,000 Germans in Posen are being prevented by the Poles from arranging for elections to the National Assembly.

Proclamations regarding the "advancing Polish Army" are being issued by the Poles, who also have regular war reports. In the meantime, the Soldiers' and Workmen's Council at Essen reported to have forbidden agitation for the raising of troops for home defense, and the Brunswick Government has forbidden their transportation in that section and is said to have disarmed many of them. At a meeting at Breslau, it was reported that the Czechs had an army of 500,000 men on the border, threatening an invasion.

Polish troops, numbering eighteen divisions, are said to be about to invade upper Silesia. Lemberg reports state that the people of the threatened districts have formulated an appeal to President Wilson, asking for protection against the Czechs. The appeal points out that their country has been overwhelmingly German since the thirteenth century and has been a part of Germany since 1742. Of its 170,000 inhabitants, the appeal says, only 5,000 speak the Czech language. Mr. Wilson is asked to prevent the forcible annexation of their country by the Czechs, saying that such an annexation would be in violation of the principles of elementary justice and "would help sow the seeds of a new war."

Paderewski Cabinet Popular.

WARSAW, Jan. 17. (Associated Press.)—The Polish Ministry formed by Ignace Jan Paderewski apparently meets with the approval of all parties except the Radical Socialists, who have threatened a general strike if the Paderewski Ministry holds office until the elections to the National Assembly, which are planned for the middle of February.

The new Cabinet represents most of the parties in German, Russian, and Austrian Poland. Bankers of Posen or German Poland, have placed 100,000,000 marks at the disposal of the new Government.

M. English, a banker of Posen, assumed office today as Minister of Finance. M. Pederewski will take charge of the Foreign Office tomorrow, with the assistance of five Under Secretaries of State. Food Minister Minkes of the old Cabinet remains at his post.

Companies' Books Show Decrease of Net Income in New York Due to the War.

NOT DUE TO HIGH SALARIES

Increased Wages, Coal, and Taxes Changed a Surplus in 1914 to a Deficit in 1918.

Mayor Hylan frequently has asserted that, if it were not for the high salaries and high rentals paid by the Interborough Rapid Transit Company and the New York Railways Company, they would not find it necessary to ask for the subways and elevated an eight-cent fare and for the surface lines a five-cent fare, with a three-cent transfer. The Mayor also has suggested that a cut in salaries and rentals would enable both corporations to run along pretty smoothly now, even at the increased cost of operating expenses brought about by war conditions.

Here are figures from the companies' books for the five months ended November, 1914, and for the five months ended November, 1918. As to the Interborough the percentage of operating expenses to gross operating revenue for the five months ended November, 1914, was 39.04 per cent. The percentage of operating expenses to gross operating revenue for the five months ended November, 1918, was 61.02 per cent. In other words, it cost the Interborough, which operates the subways and the elevated, a little more than 39 cents out of every dollar it took in to operate its lines for the five months ended November, 1914, and a little more than 61 cents for the five months ended Nov. 30, 1918. For the five months ended November, 1914, the ratio of taxes to gross operating revenues was 6.48 per cent, while for the five months ended Nov. 30, 1918, it was 9 73 per cent.

The gross operating revenue for the five months of 1918 was $18,170,955. If the same conditions had then prevailed as in those same months in 1914 the operating expenses—39.04 per cent.—would have been $6,313,133, leaving a net operating revenue of $9,857,902. Taxes amounting to $1,044,642 would have cut this to $8,813,160, and to this would be added a nonoperating income of $233,459, making a total income of $9,046,619. From this would have to be deducted interest, rental, and other charges of $7,230,485, leaving a net income of $1,816,136.

But under the 1918 conditions the result shows a deficit of $2,266,527. Consequently the change from 1914 to 1918 shows a total decrease in net income of $4,082,663 for five months, which is at the rate of nearly $10,000,000 a year.

Higher Wages and Coal.

The comparison of the two items of wages and coal for the periods shows startling differences. For the five months ended Nov. 30, 1914, the Interborough paid for wages $3,111,360. For the five months ended Nov. 30, 1918, the company paid $6,741,611. For the five months ended Nov. 30, 1914, the company paid for coal $390,824. For the same period in 1918 it paid $1,525,796. But in 1918 the company operated 22 per cent. more car miles. Deducting the increase in wages and coal due to the increase in mileage the five months ended Nov. 30, 1918, compared with the same months in 1914, showed these increases: Wages, due to increased rates of pay, $2,561,613, and coal, due to higher price per ton, $626,993, a total increase of $3,182,606.

An examination of the conditions confronting the surface lines for the five months ended Nov. 30, 1914, as compared with the same months in 1918 showed that high rentals and high salaries cut small figure in the condition in which the surface lines find themselves. If the war had not intervened, and the company could have had the benefit of the normal cost of service, operating expenses, and taxes, such as prevailed in 1914, the New York Railways Company would be in what the examiner called a "seaworthy" condition, and, in any event, would have been able to meet its fixed charges, consisting of rentals for the use of leased properties and the interest on its prior lien bonds, as well as having something left to pay in interest on its 5 per cent. second mortgage income bonds.

This was shown by a comparison of the five months ended Nov. 30, 1918, with the same months of 1914. This comparison showed that, applying to the actual operating revenue collected under the car-miles run in 1918 the same ratio of cost (operating expenses and taxes) existing during the same five months of 1914, the situation, as to the surface railways, would be: The 1914 and 1918 operating revenue was practically the same, $4,018,972. For the five months ended Nov. 30, 1918, the operating expenses were $3,536,876, the ratio to revenue being 76.57 per cent. For the five months in 1914 the operating expenses were $2,889,167, the ratio to revenue being 62.55 per cent. This means an increase in operating expenses of $647,500, with a ratio to revenue of 14.02.

The taxes for 1918 amounted to $518,882, with a ratio of revenue of 11.23 per cent. The taxes for to revenue of 7.68 per cent., showing an increase in taxes for the period of $164,145, with a ratio to revenue of 3.55 per cent. The total operating expenses and taxes for the period in 1918 were $4,055, 558, with a ratio to revenue of 87 80 per cent. The total operating expenses and taxes for the 1914 period were $3,243,804, with a ratio to revenue of 70.23, showing an increase in operating expenses and taxes in 1918 over $4,055,558, with a ratio to revenue of of 17.57 per cent.

Decrease in Net Income.

It was found that the net income from street railway operations for the five months ended Nov. 30, 1918, amounted to $563,414, with a ratio to revenue of 12.20 per cent. Net income for the five months ended Nov. 30, 1914, was $1,375,068, with a ratio to revenue of 29.77 per cent., showing a decrease in net income of $811,654, with a ratio to revenue of 17.57 per cent. The nonoperating income for the 1918 and 1914 periods was the same—$219,366.

Therefore, the gross income for the 1918 period was $782,780, while the gross income for the 1914 period was $1,594,434, showing a falling off of $811,654. Deduct from the gross income for the 1918 period interest, rentals, and amortization charges, amounting to $1,390,581, and a net loss in the operation of the surface lines of $607,801 is shown. For the 1914 period, after deducting interest, rentals, and amortization charges, amounting to $1,390,581, the net profit on operations is shown to be $203,853.

The net income from street railway operations of $1,375,068 for the 1914 period, it was explained, is equal to about $3,300,000, on a monthly average basis, for one year. This amount, with the nonoperating income, it was said, would have been more than sufficient to meet the minimum annual requirements. It was further explained that the income from street railway operations, as reported to the Public Service Commission, for the five months ended Nov. 30, 1918, as being $563,414, was equal, on a monthly average basis, to about $1,352,000 a year. The difference in net incomes from operations for the two periods of about $1,948,000 is attributed entirely to the existing high cost of labor, material, and taxes arising from war conditions.

The facts as brought out by the examination show that the New York Railways Company has never earned or paid a dividend on its stock, and has not been earning in the last two years and more even the full paid interest on the first mortgage bonds or anything for interest on its income bonds. The company asserts that this condition is due wholly to the war, because, in normal times, the company was able to meet all fixed charges, including the interest and its mortgage obligations, and also pay a return on its adjustment mortgage bonds.

Hearing on City Lines.

Godfrey Goldmark, chief counsel of the Public Service Commission, has announced that this week the commission will hold hearings concerning the service, equipment, and regulations of the various transportation lines in the city, and that efforts will be made to close the hearings speedily, so that full information concerning these matters may be at the disposal of the public. It was understood that the commission was eager to help the courts, which have pending before them proceedings involving the interests of any of the railroad corporations, and for this purpose complete records of the physical condition of the companies would be prepared and placed within easy reach of the public.

Beginning at 2:30 o'clock tomorrow afternoon with a hearing relating to the service and equipment of the New York Railways Company, there will be hearings or conferences every day by the commission or by Mr. Goldmark and his assistants on railroad matters. Public hearings will be held on Tuesday on the application of the New York Railways Company for authority to increase the rate of fare, and concerning the transfer system, changes in schedules and in routes and service of the Brooklyn Heights Railroad Company, a surface subsidiary of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company; and on Friday there will be an inquiry into the service and equipment of the New York Consolidated Railroad Company, one of the concerns now in control of Receiver Lindley M. Garrison.

During the week there will also be hearings on an application of the Kings County Electric Light Company for permission to issue $6,000,000 in bonds, concerning the discontinuance of the express station at Douglaston, and concerning the compliance of the Edison companies of Manhattan and Brooklyn with the system of accounts prescribed by the Public Service Commission.

SAYS THE CITY WILL SUFFER.

E. H. Outerbridge Warns Against Danger of Transit Receiverships.

Eugenius H. Outerbridge, formerly President of the Chamber of Commerce, said yesterday that if the business of transporting passengers is indicated as unprofitable by such a demonstration as forcing into receivership of all of the operating companies, the business of municipal transportation will be blighted in a manner from which it may not recover for a generation, and the greatest sufferer in that blight would not be the security holders of the companies, but the City of New York and the interests of its citizens as a whole. Mr. Outerbridge, in a letter addressed to the Board of Estimate, said in part:

"It appears to me that what is now on trial is not the Interborough Rapid Transit Company, or the New York City Railways Company, but the whole business of passenger transportation in the City of New York. No other city in the Union has the density of traffic that New York has. If transporting people in this city cannot be done so as to make the investment of capital in the enterprise safe, it will be generally concluded that it cannot be done elsewhere.

"There are billions of dollars of capital invested in the securities of municipal and interurban transit companies, and if the business is utterly discredited here in New York that discredit will spread like a conflagration to every other community where the people are dependent upon transit lines now or upon those to be built in the future. Such a discredit might very easily cause a countrywide financial panic much easier to start than to control, and the consequences of which could not be forecast. That gives the subject a national aspect not to be disregarded, the local aspect appears to be even more serious.

"The statement of your board that there is no pretense that the income from a 5-cent fare is not sufficient to meet all operating and other expenses seems to imply that your board assumes that operating and current expenses are all that concerns the city, and that if the present operating companies cannot meet their obligations and should either voluntarily or by compulsion surrender their operating contracts, it would be a simple and safe transition for the city to take over the operation.

"It must be apparent, however, to the members of your board, so intimately familiar with what has heretofore been the astounding growth in the population of the City of New York, that more subways and more outlying branches in the various boroughs will again be needed in a very few years if New York is to be permitted to grow in the future as it has in the past. It must also be apparent that the money for construction from time to time in the future of additional transit facilities must be raised from the private owners of capital whether the security offered be New York City corporate stock or the securities of a private corporation. The amounts needed for construction of subways will doubtless always be in excess of any normal borrowing capacity that the city is likely to have.

"The provision that self-supporting securities may be exempted from the computation of the city's debt was expected to permit of the creation of what might be termed a revolving credit fund, which could be constantly used to provide for these growing needs; namely—that the interest and amortization, being promptly earned through operating return as soon as the system was complete, would permit those obligations to be exempted, thus restoring an equal amount of borrowing capacity for the next operation. If it is now proved that this process is impracticable, and if it is a fact, as declaring in your statement, that the city's investment in the dual subway is a total loss, from what source can the city hope or expect to raise funds in the future additions to the system when they become necessary?

"New York as a municipality—and that means all its citizens without exception—is most vitally interested in having the transportation of its citizens a sufficiently safe and sound business to permit of securing capital for its extensions; and obversely, if permanent doubt of the safeness and soundness of the business of transporting the people is created, the municipality will not only be the greatest loser, but through checking its growth, restricting its future taxable values, and the loss of its credit, its suffering and loss would be so stupendous that no one could venture to predict or to calculate it."

Volunteer "War Firemen" Benefit.

A concert for the benefit of the Volunteer "War Firemen" will be given in the Hippodrome tonight. All the money will be used in buying equipment for the volunteers who have offered their services to the city during the shortage of firemen caused by the operation of the selective service law. Twenty volunteer vaudeville artists will be on the program. Governor Smith, Mayor Hylan, Fire Commissioner Drennan, and other city officials who aided in the formation of the reserve corps have been invited.

SEES STEADY RISE OF THE MOB SPIRIT

Congressman Lunn Tells Women His Hope for the Quelling of Unrest Lies in Wilson.

PRAISES ADMINISTRATION

Puts Deaths of Americans Due to War at 100,000, Many of Them from Influenza.

The total of American casualties here and abroad, from all causes, will reach 300,000, and the total of dead probably will be close to 100,000, declared Congressman George R. Lunn, Democrat, of Schenectady, a member of the House Military Affairs Committee, yesterday while discussing "Democracy on Trial" before 1,500 women members of the League for Political Education, in Carnegie Hall. Explaining his figures later, Congressman Lunn pointed out that the influenza epidemic in the home camps was largely responsible for the high death rate, the actual battle dead being comparatively small beside the losses of the Allies.

Mr. Lunn, developing his topic, warned his auditors of the steady growth of what he termed "the mob spirit," an increase which, as he pointed out, was strange since the history of all times proved that such tactics by the people never accomplished reforms. He indicated his conviction, however, that the President upon his return undoubtedly would be able to diminish the unrest. Warm praise of the Administration for the conduct of the war, the citing of example after example of what had been accomplished, afforded Mr. Lunn an opportunity to refer to those who had held back pre-war precautionary measures as "political cowards and fourflushers."

He disclosed that when the House Military Affairs Committee went into session to consider methods for raising an army the vote stood 13 for the volunteer system and 8 for the Selective Service bill, but that, after much debate back of the doors, all had come around to the fairness of the draft system.

Speaking of La Follette, Mr. Lunn said: "I find many persons, perfectly harmless sons of them, in jail, and yet I find the Senate voting to clear La Follette. He, you'll remember, said that America went to war for money and to save J. P. Morgan. Whether the Senate votes to clear him or not, the man who says that lies.

"Our boys in France," he continued, "understand why the President went overseas. They know that the future peace of the world depended upon it. He is there to try to bring about permanent peace, as diplomatically as possible. Don't think that all those European nations are as idealistic as we are. The future of the world depends upon a good understanding between the United States and the other great race of English-speakers.

"We are going to have the League of Nations or we are going to prepare for another war. I believe, however, that Woodrow Wilson, despite his foes, is coming back to America with the League of Nations in his vest pocket. There are men in France today for the express purpose of telling the people over there that Woodrow Wilson doesn't really represent the American viewpoint and that the American people aren't back of him. They lie!"

In reference to the proposal to keep the Peace Conference proceedings secret he said:

"They're trying to put the black curtain of quietness and ignorance before the people of the world. That is not going to be successful. Woodrow Wilson will rend that curtain, so that we shall not have another Congress of Vienna. A peace settled upon back of a curtain of darkness will be the cornerstone of the next war's foundation."

HENEY TELLS OF PLANS MADE BY PACKERS

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—Francis J. Heney, counsel for the Federal Trade Commission in its meat packing inquiry, told the Senate Agriculture Committee today of plans which he said the packers had discussed for establishing a joint office in Washington with a card index on Congressmen and their attitude toward legislation. He said the scheme was outlined by John Eversman, former Secretary of the National Republican Congressional Committee, and included arrangements for contributions by the packers for Congressional campaigns.

Letter heads of the Republican Committee, Mr. Heney said, were used by Eversman in correspondence in behalf of the packers. Eversman, he added, was employed as Washington representative of Wilson & Co. Senator Gronna of North Dakota stated he understood Mr. Eversman had not been in the employ of the committee for two years.

Senator France of Maryland inquired about relations between the packers and the food administration, declaring it was highly improper for Food Administrator Hoover to "arrange meat prices behind closed doors" in conferences with the packers.

"Do you think it was proper for Mr. Hoover to retain in his office men on the payrolls of the packers?" Senator Gore of Oklahoma asked.

"It was absolutely improper," replied Mr. Heney, who said he thought Mr. Hoover's efforts were directed toward "taking care of the middleman."

Senator Gore said that "with salaries of $1 a year from the Government and $10,000 from the packers, there isn't much question where lay the interest of these men, employed by the Food Administration."

Senator Norris of Nebraska remarked that he thought hog producers had been treated very unfairly by Mr. Hoover.

"We are going to have the League of Nations or we are going to prepare for another war. I believe, however, that Woodrow Wilson, despite his foes, is coming back to America with the League of Nations in his vest pocket. There are men in France today for the express purpose of telling the people over there that Woodrow Wilson doesn't really represent the American viewpoint and that the American people aren't back of him. They lie!"

In reference to the proposal to keep the Peace Conference proceedings secret he said:

"They're trying to put the black curtain of quietness and ignorance before the people of the world. That is not going to be successful. Woodrow Wilson will rend that curtain, so that we shall not have another Congress of Vienna. A peace settled upon back of a curtain of darkness will be the cornerstone of the next war's foundation."

Senator Gore asked if Mr. Heney knew what press association was meant and that he did not know its identity.

After the hearing Mr. Eversman said when the charge that he had arranged with an employe of a press association to get information on legislation was made first, a year ago, he wrote to the Chairman of the Standing Committee of Correspondents at the Capitol, explaining that he had asked his cousin, a young reporter, to give him the numbers and titles of bills pertaining to food after they had been introduced. The reporter in question was Willis J. O'Brien, who at that time and for a short time afterward was employed by the United Press Association.

Everett Brown, President of the Chicago Livestock Exchange, testified before the House Interstate Commerce Committee today that Government operation of stockyards would result in the stifling of competition in the purchase of livestock, and that producers would be forced to accept any prices the packers desired to pay. He said the stockyards were the "babies" of the packers, as shown by evidence of the Federal Trade Commission, and that if the Government took them over, the packers would buy direct from the producers.

NOT TIME TO TALK LEAGUE, SAYS BECK

Nations Should Confine Themselves to Concrete, Not Abstract, Problems Now.

AGAINST OPEN CONFERENCE

W. D. Guthrie Tells Bar Association War Vindicated Honor of Nations in Upholding Treaties.

Henry W. Taft, the newly elected President of the New York State Bar Association, reviewed the work accomplished by lawyers in the war in his address at the dinner of the association which closed its annual meeting in the Hotel Astor last night. He said that 30 per cent. of the lawyers between the ages of 21 and 31 were in service, a larger proportion than had been contributed by any other profession, and he paid a tribute to the work of Provost Marshal General Crowder.

"This truly wonderful achievement," said he, speaking of the success of the draft, "required the intuition and training of the soldier, and the professional skill of a trained lawyer and the broad vision of the constructive statesman. The man was found in the great lawyer-soldier Major Gen. Enoch H. Crowder, the Provost Marshal General. His services in making the United States a potent factor in the winning of the war may fairly be ranked with the achievements of General Pershing."

At the afternoon session of the annual meeting in the association's rooms the League of Nations idea was the topic of discussion, in which the principal speakers were James M. Beck and William D. Guthrie.

James M. Beck's Address.

James M. Beck, who returned from Europe recently, said in his address that there was little interest in England, France and Italy in the project for a League of Nations and the impression here that the masses of the population were enthusiastic for it had been created by misleading dispatches from American correspondents.

Mr. Beck attacked the proposal for open and public conduct of the Peace Conference. He called attention to the fact that the Constitution of the United States had been framed behind closed doors, and insisted that it could never have been created if there had been a press gallery to advertise every point of difference and friction between the States. Vigorous and prolonged applause came from the member at the end of the speech and several came forward to shake hands with him.

"This is the worst time," said Mr. Beck, after a few preliminary words, "for nations in their collective capacity to construct or reconstruct human society upon broad and abstract principles, and no more unfortunate time could have been selected than the present for laying down rules for the governance of society.

"I say that for two or three reasons: First, I would have you observe that the abstract and the concrete in these problems are so interwoven that it is difficult to separate them, and the concrete is of such urgent importance that we can well confine ourselves to that feature for the present. Of course, I am not saying to a distinguished body of lawyers that the abstract may not be taken up in future days which may some day dawn. I am referring now to the collective effort of organized nations to do that which we are now discussing in the abstract.

"In the first place, to use an epigram which will always live in our language, an epigram of a late President, President Cleveland, 'It is a condition and not a theory which confronts us.' I hope I will not be accused, on the other hand, of entering into a controversial theme, when I say that in my opinion the greatest disservice that the United States has done in this great world's crisis, next to its unfortunate neutrality for three years, is the fact that it prematurely negotiated peace proposals, and included in those peace proposals certain abstract points, which for the moment confused the issues and made impossible the satisfactory adjustments of the concrete problem.

Other Nations Bankrupt.

"When this war ended on Nov. 11 there was one great urgent task before the nations of the world. It was to make peace with Germany, to make it quickly, justly, and to allow nothing to divert or confuse; and above all to allow nothing which would divide the councils of the allied powers, who, having been reasonably united on the field of battle, found it well to be reasonably united in the hour of peace.

"The world outside of our own rich country was bankrupt. That is a plain statement of fact. England has $40,000,000,000 of indebtedness. Its service alone is $2,000,000,000 a year. It is living on its capital today, paying its interest on its loans out of moneys it borrows, and that means only one thing.

"France has a debt of $35,000,000,000. Its expenditures before the war amounted to $1,000,000,000 annually. I do not know how much was allocated to the army and how much to the navy, but at least $500,000,000 was. If the French Army were demobilized and disbanded tomorrow and the navy was put in the docks, France would still have to raise $500,000,000, plus $2,000,000,000 to pay the service and the loan.

"If that be true of two great nations like England and France, you can well imagine somewhat the conditions in Italy. Therefore, from the standpoint of our allies, it was essential that peace should be restored, that the wheels of industry should move again, and that in that period following the restoration of business, negotiations could be acted upon that would enable subsequently these problems of League of Nations and the future codification of the law of nations, and freedom of the seas could be taken up.

"There is this second reason: That every day's delay means that the problems in Germany and Russia become increasingly more difficult. It is absolutely impossible to construct society on any foundation unless there is a stable Government formed in Germany; and at the time when the armistice was declared, when all the German States except Prussia withdrew and were disposed to form other groups, it would have been easy then for the Allies to have extended a helping hand—not out of consideration for Germany, but for the benefit of the Allies themselves.

"It was essential that Germany should have a stable Government with which, in the broadest spirit of liberality, the allied nations could treat. Meantime the streets of Berlin and of Petrograd are running with blood, while we are paltering with 'freedom of the seas' and 'League of Nations' and all manner of abstractions, which years from now may be translated into practice.

"It is absolutely the same condition prevailing as there is in a mining camp, where anarchy has gone from end to the other, when houses are in flames and men are being shot down on all sides—that would not be a time to meet to consider the governance of that section of the country. But the first thing to do there would be for law to prevail and peace to become established, and then when the blood is out of their eyes, possibly other problems could come to the surface.

No Time for Abstract Questions.

"The people of these allied countries are not in any mood at this time to discuss these abstract questions. If you had been there, as I have been, and saw them, as I was privileged to see them at the hour of the armistice, you would understand why they are not. They are coming out of a state of stupor; they have been sandbagged almost into insensibility by the greatest terrors of recorded history; France and England have lost, each of them, one million in dead. The two nations together have put under the sod more men than the total number of those we sent over. Over two million have been buried by Great Britain and France, not to speak of the almost innumerable hosts of casualties.

"That is not what the press representatives tell you. They tell you there is a profound agitation for the League of Nations. I tell you it is not so. There may be some such thing among the advanced Socialists. There is a great demand for the League of Nations—there is in England a party opposed to Lloyd George, who have it as a battle cry, and many men in the Church are attracted by the visions of a perpetual peace, forgetful that when we had The Hague Convention those principles were adopted in the form of treaty, and Great Britain and France were left to vindicate those principles.

"I say that, except for the people whom I have mentioned and the obvious policy of many leading officials who support it because it is believed to be pleasing to the United States, there is no real interest in England in the League of Nations at the present time.

"I believe that to be true also of France, and simple because when a man or a nation has been profoundly disillusioned, when they have found that treaties are scraps of paper, that great and enlightened civilized nations have violated their obligations as members of society, and forget or ignore their specific covenants, then under those circumstances you cannot get those people wildly interested in the new plan, which, so far as I can judge from their specific provisions, does not rise above the dignity of The Hague Conference, and is far less impressive as a moral authority.

"Today the League of Nations would find the world not merely torn with strife and hatred, hatred not likely to die for many generations, and by nations whose interests are so conflicting it would make any general consensus of opinion one of extraordinary difficulty.

"Our Government has a dominant position in Paris at this time because we are considered the greatest nation in the world. English publicists see the looming mountain mass of this great republic, and they know this republic will exercise a position of enormous influence in the future of the world; and, therefore, I know after talking with them that apart from the profound gratitude and appreciation for what they have done in the world, and on the broadest grounds of public policy, they will make any concession that seems to be demanded by the United States. And, therefore, the United States has this position of unique power.

Sagacity of Fathers Needed.

"If only it were used with the sagacity of the fathers! If only one voice could ring out in Paris at the conference: 'Let us do what is practical now. Let us put aside these visionary problems. Let us try to do what is now possible. Let us then take the five years that the founders of this republic allowed themselves, and after five years, when society is reconstructed, when these foundations are measurably restored and the results of industry are returning, let us then take up these questions of League of Nations, freedom of the seas, and so forth, when sanity has returned to an almost insane world.'

"No body of men in all history could stand before the general body of men who met at Philadelphia in the Continental Congress. It is amazing when we look back at that period to note the sagacity with which they wrought the great work which finally resulted in the Constitution of the United States.

"Now, during the Revolutionary War they neither talked terms of peace nor abstractions of any kind. Only one exception can be made to that remark with reference to abstractions, and that was when the issue of independence, being more or less in controversy among the Colonies themselves, the Declaration of Independence was adopted, which undoubtedly was a statement of abstract principles designed to uphold the great aim and goal toward which men could strive. But, with that exception, they were very, very careful to keep in mind the one concrete thing, and that was, to make peace with the only country with which they were warring, upon the terms and accomplishing the purposes and objects for which the war was brought. Therefore, the war ended.

"Now, mark. Did they then at once meet in a Constitutional Convention, with their credit gone, their industry practically destroyed, their homes gone, and with their minds paralyzed by the horrors of a seven years' war? No. If I remember correctly, the Continental Congress did not meet for five years after the treaty of peace with the mother country was signed. Just as the Allies should now in dealing with Germany, and in handling the other great problems before them, such as Russia, they should stick to the concrete proposition and solve that first. That was the wisdom of our fathers, and we should follow it now.

"After five years they met in a Constitutional Convention. The second day of that convention they passed a resolution that nothing taking place there should be divulged to any one outside, the provision being for absolute secrecy in relation to the proceedings. And as far as we now know, we know that without secrecy of proceedings the Constitution of the United States could never have been adopted. If after the close of proceedings every day a press gallery had gone throughout the country telling what Mr. Hamilton and Mr. Franklin and Mr. Morris had talked about, what points they had differed upon, and had in that way increased their difficulties."

Honor of Nations Vindicated.

William D. Guthrie, whose address opened the discussion of the League of Nations, opposed any sylelding of independence by the United States or other countries to any general federation, and said that no international military power was required to discipline nations which might in the future attempt to do what Germany did in 1914. Denying the assertion that the events of the war showed treaties and international law to be without value, he continued:

"The present war and its victory have vindicated the obligation of treaties and of the plighted faith and honor of nations infinitely more than ever before. In fact, the vindication of the sanctity and value of treaties has been most emphatic. Witness valiant and noble France, without a moment of hesitation or fear, facing the awful catastrophe of war and national ruin in order to keep her treaty with Russia. Witness heroic and sublime Belgium, braving destruction by and slavery to the savage and brutal Germans in order to keep her treaty obligation to maintain neutrality."

After a tribute to the "grandeur, nobility, and sublimity" of England's refusal to break faith in an old pledge to maintain the neutrality of Belgium, he said:

"The truth is that the sanctity and force of treaties are today more firmly established than at any time in the history of the world, that treaty obligations are more sacred and binding than ever before, and that we Americans can safely continue to rely upon their effectiveness in our dealings and intercourse with other civilized nations."

After urging great caution on the part of this country in entering into any league, and emphasizing the duty of the Senate to exercise its independent judgment on any plan vitally affecting America's future, he went on:

"Favoring, as I believe most of us do, the general idea of a League of Nations, which shall settle important questions of international law and establish a permanent court of arbitral justice, and recognizing the probable necessity of such a league in some form, let us nevertheless trust that its final terms will not impair the sovereignty and independence of the nation, and, above all other considerations, that it will not compel us to go to war for any cause unless the Congress shall at the time determine on the merits of the actual question that a matter of paramount national duty, honor or interest is involved sufficient in its judgment to justify war and the sending of our soldiers and sailors if need be to the ends of the earth to fight and to die.

Of Vital Importance to Us.

"The formulation of the terms of this League of Nations may turn out to be very much more important to our vital interests and welfare than the framing of any State constitution or, indeed, the Federal Constitution itself, for it may irrevocably commit our national honor to ruinous policies, duties, and obligations. Certainly this association would treat as foolhardiness and recklessness in the extreme a proposition to approve a State constitution of which most of its provisions were as yet undisclosed and unformulated. When the terms of the proposed League of Nations have been finally announced, the members of this association can consider them with the care they demand, and, if necessary, can call a special meeting at which the propositions can be thoroughly and exhaustively analysed and debated.

"In the meantime, it is hardly necessary for us precipately to approve the mere theory or principle of a League of Nations in the abstract, and any such hasty action on our part at the present crucial time is certain to be misinterpreted as favoring some plan or other called a League of Nations which is not before us and of which we may have little or no definite conception.

"In conclusion, I would venture to add a word on the subject of internationalism, which in theory is so attractive to some, but which in practice, as many believe, left France and England unprepared for war in 1914 and on the verge of disaster. It seems to me that not a step should be taken committing or covenanting our country which shall tend toward internationalism in the sense that its most persistent advocates conceive it, or which shall tend in any degree to diminish what we know as nationalism or independence in contradistinction to internationalism or the interdependence of nations.

"We are altogether too proud of the display of nationalism and peace throughout the world at whatever cost of American life and treasure. But before we assume any such extensive and far-reaching obligation and duty, and thereby mortgage our future and the future of our children, it is certainly not too much to demand great caution and deliberation in order that the nation shall not be committed to any particular League of Nations until it has been fully advised as to its terms and provisions and has had full opportunity to study and discuss them and weigh their obligations. At least due opportunity should be first afforded our representatives in the Senate to give their advice and consent, for we are still essentially a representative form of republican government and the Constitution still regulates the treaty-making power."

The association adopted a resolution introduced by Mr. Guthrie refusing its indorsement to any particular proposals for a League of Nations until some later date when the plan adopted is published in authentic form, but expressing the general adherence of the association to the principle of arbitration of disputes between nations, whether secured by treaties or by a League of Nations.

SENATE INQUIRY DIRECTED AT REDS

Propaganda Committee to Look Into Activities of Bolshevist Press in This Country.

EMBOLDENED BY ARMISTICE

Foreign Language Papers in New York and Elsewhere Outspoken in Urging Revolution.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—That the signing of the armistice which ended hostilities on Nov. 11 "caused an apparent let down in the tense morale of the people of America" is the gist of a report of a Government official whose duties have to do with the German, Bolshevist, I. W. W., and certain phases of Socialistic propaganda in the United States.

These propagandists are carrying on their work through various newspapers, with a few exceptions all printed in foreign languages, and for the first time since April 6, 1917, when the United States entered the war, these papers are openly advocating class war in the United States and the setting up of a form of Bolshevist Government.

The Senate Committee on Propaganda will take up this question before it concludes its work.

Today a great mass of documents dealing with this propaganda, all of it data concerning matters which have come out since the signing of the armistice, was turned over to Major E. Lowry Humes by the Government. Major Humes is now going over the data and is expected to submit recommendations to the committee when it meets in executive session Monday morning.

"This is a matter," said Major Humes tonight, "of the greatest importance. I am going over all these documents with the greatest care and will submit my conclusions to the committee. Whether or not this form of propaganda shall be made a subject of the present inquiry, or course, rests with the committee."

"Since hostilities ceased," one of these Government reports reads, "there have been a number of newspapers which have become fiercely outspoken in their championship of the anarchial doctrines of the I. W. W. and its radical sisterhood, the Bolsheviki. A large Socialist group of foreign language papers have become distinctly more outspoken in their utterances, and these papers are to a greater or lesser degree steadily inculcating the principles which lead inevitably toward Bolshevism."

Many of these radical papers are published in New York City. One of the most active is the Labor Defender, the I. W. W. paper. In its issue of Dec. 1 this paper said:

"The working class and the employing class have nothing in common. There can be no peace so long as hunger and want are found among millions of working people. The Bolsheviki are coming, successful revolutions. Only when the masses have become inculcated with an intense spirit of class solidarity can they hope to reap the fruits of the great revolutionary struggle. They thought they would get the Stars and Stripes into Berlin first, but the red flag beat them to it. Will it require another war to cure the American workers?

The Elore, a Hungarian daily of New York, on the day the armistice was signed, printed the following: "The war was but the terrible coping of the interest which served the privileged class. The Socialist press has never forgotten to emphasize this fact. Today, when it is only a question of hours when the world war will end a daily increasing number of events proves the steadily growing conviction how true the above statement is, and daily more and more signs show that the preparation for our war is now going on."

The Arbetaren, a Swedish paper published in New York City, in its issue of Nov. 23 printed the following: "The right to live is decided by the right to the means of production, and with this at their disposition the capitalist class makes every reform into a scrap of paper, without value to the working classes. Evolution is ready for the next step. Let us be prepared for the revolution."

In The Workman and Peasant of New York City, which is a Russian weekly and is described as the official organ in New York of the Soviet and Russian Workers' Deputies, there appeared in the issue of Nov. 13 an article from which the following excerpts are taken:

"We are standing at the threshold of universal revolution. The crisis is ripe. All the future of the Russian revolution is at stake. All the future of the International Social revolution is at stake."

BRYAN ISSUES STATEMENT.

Tells Why Dickinson Letters "Could Not Explain Resignation."

BALTIMORE, Md., Jan. 18.—William Jennings Bryan made the following statement here today concerning the statement made in a letter written by J. J. Dickinson to George Sylvester Viereck, purporting to give the reasons for Mr. Bryan's resignation as Secretary of State.

"I do not care to discuss letters written by other people or their opinions, but in regard to the incident referred to I will say that all that I have seen so far in the Dickinson letters refers to things that took place after my resignation and therefore could not explain the resignation. My letter to the President and his reply explain the reasons for my resignation."

The letter was read at yesterday's hearing at Washington of the Senate committee investigating German propaganda. It stated that Mrs. Bryan had told T. H. Pickford, described by Dickinson as a Democratic magnate, that her husband had resigned from the Cabinet because Secretary Tumulty had told a prominent German-American that Bryan was the sole cause of the Administration's anti-German policy.

ALARM IN ENGLAND OVER LABOR UNREST

Nearly All Trades Demanding Either Higher Wages or Shorter Hours, or Both.

BEER ISSUE IS REVIVED

Dock Workers Complain of the Quality of Beverage and Shortage of the Supply.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—The industrial unrest prevalent throughout the country is causing serious anxiety, not only to large employers of labor, but even to conservative labor leaders. The labor leaders taking this attitude include J. H. Thomas, General Secretary of the Railwaymen's Union, who yesterday warned a meeting of postal workers who were demanding a forty-two hour week, more holidays, and curtailment of night work, that "the industrial and economic position of this country gives cause for alarm."

The postal workers are only one of many trade unions which are demanding shorter hours with the present or better pay. Up to this time the demands of the miners have been embodied in the resolutions of the Southport Miners' Federation, who on Wednesday demanded that the Government demobilize all miners in the army and that wages bther than war wages be advanced 30 per cent.

The attitude of the miners has caused the most comment, as coal and its price more directly affect the public. It is estimated that to grant a 30 per cent. increase in wages would send the price of coal up at least a dollar a ton.

In addition to the miners, the shipbuilders on the Clyde and in other centres are agitating for a forty-hour week, with daily wages of £1. The men engaged in the same industry in Belfast threaten to throw down their tools at the end of the month unless they get a forty-four-hour week. The carpenters throughout the United Kingdom are asking for a forty-seven-hour week, and the iron molders, who recently got forty-seven hours, are threatening to strike unless this is lowered to forty-four hours.

The dock laborers are putting forth a demand for forty-four hours for day workers and forty-one hours for night workers. They are also much agitated over the shortage of beer and the poor quality of that beverage, and during the week there has been much slacking, particularly at Liverpool, from the cause. There has been a temporary shortage of beer at some shipping points due to a strike of brewery employes, who also complain of long hours.

All these unions are strong numerically and well organized, and from the tone of speeches at their meetings the members apparently are prepared to go to extremes in their efforts to have conditions of labor improved along the lines laid down in their resolutions.

There also have been minor troubles in the labor world. One of these affected the crew of the liner Adriatic. The sailing of that vessel for New York with a full list of American passengers has been delayed several days, and there is yet no indication of a settlement.

BRITAIN MAY IGNORE SINN FEIN ASSEMBLY

Officials Divided as to Best Means of Dealing with Meeting Next Tuesday.

DUBLIN, Jan. 18, (Associated Press.)—Sinn Fein officials announced today that the meeting of the Irish Republican Parliament next Tuesday will be open to the press and public on presentation of tickets obtainable at Sinn Fein headquarters. Representation will be confined to elected members of the Parliament, but the unsuccessful candidates and men occupying Government positions will participate.

A confrence was held in Dublin Castle today at which the Lord Lieutenant, the Lord Chancellor, the commander of the forces, Attorney General, and Solicitor General considered the situation. Differences of opinion are believed to exist as to whether it would be wiser to ignore Tuesday's Assembly and proceed only against acts of intimidation or violence, or whether the Assembly should be suppressed as illegal. A majority of the people expect that the former vote will prevail.

SOCIETY OF GENESEE DINES.

Secretary Redfield Tells of America's Commercial Triumphs.

The twentieth annual dinner of the Society of the Genesee was held last night at the Hotel Biltmore. The speakers were William C. Redfield, Secretary of Commerce; Charles D. Newton, Attorney General of New York State; Captain Elbridge L. Adams, Dr. Cornelius Woelfkin of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, and Congressman Fiorello La Guardia.

Secretary Redfield said it will be necessary to quickly build 1,000,000 homes in Europe, the material for which will have to come to a large extent from this country. He traced the commercial achievements of the United States in the war, and declared that this country must lend Europe many millions in order that it may pay for the goods purchased here.

In a resolution on the death of Theodore Roosevelt it was said before the entrance of the United States into the war "he pointed out the imminent menace of Germany's plans to free institutions, and reminded our people of their urgent duty to defend them." Another resolution protested against secrecy at the Peace Conference. The society sent greetings to President Wilson, and assured him that its members, comprising men in various walks of life and all parties, heartily support his efforts to make permanent the peace of the world through a League of Nations." The guests received copies of "Impressions of the Kaiser," by David Jayne Hill, ex-Ambassador to Germany, a member of the society, who was present as was also another former Ambassador to Germany, James W. Gerard, also a member. Mr. Gerard was elected President.

AMERICANS ON THE CHAOUIA

Two Are Reported Saved from the Disaster.

MARSEILLES, Jan. 18.—The two American citizens who were on board the French steamer Chaouia, which was sunk by a mine off Sicily with the loss of nearly 500 lives, are given on the passenger list as Thomas Rallis and Mrs. Susan Rallis. They are listed as "Americans" without any mention of what part of the United States they came from.

The list of survivors of the Chaouia received here includes: "Bailey and Madame Bailey, Americans."

COPELAND DECLINES TO TALK ON CHANGES

Says He Is Too Busy to Discuss Health Bureau Controversy Before Women's League.

WILL RECEIVE COMMITTEE

Rabbi Kaplan Says City Administration's "Tampering" Is "Political Sabotage."

In reply to the invitation extended to him by the Woman's Municipal League to speak at their meeting called for tomorrow afternoon at 4:30 o'clock in the Murray Hill Hotel to discuss the withdrawal of the Division of Industrial Hygiene from the Bureau of Preventable Diseases, Health Commissioner Copeland said yesterday that he regretted the pressure of official business would make it impossible for him to attend.

Dr. Copeland said, however, that he would be glad to lay all the facts regarding the proposed change before a committee that the league might send to him at their convenience and that he would then explain his plan in full.

The league also asked Dr. Copeland's permission for Dr. Emilie I. Harris, head of the Bureau of Preventable Diseases, to address the meeting. The Commissioner made no response to this request but it was explained on his behalf by his Secretary that the Commissioner has no control over the actions of his subordinates outside of office hours.

The meeting will be a conference of representatives of more than sixty civic, labor, and social welfare agencies to discuss Commissioner Copeland's change in the Health Department. The speakers, it was announced yesterday, will be Mrs. Florence Kelley of the National Consumers' League; Rose Schneiderman of the Women's Trades Union League; James J. Bagley of Franklin Union No. 23, and others.

Dr. Mordecai M. Kaplan, Rabbi of the Jewish Centre, 131 West Eighty-sixth Street, discussing Commissioner Copeland's action in his sermon yesterday, said:

"It is the duty of every citizen to protest against the present political tampering with the successful and indispensable work of the Division of Industrial Hygiene. The present city Administration entered upon a policy of political sabotage from the moment it came into power. It has carried out that policy in a most high-handed manner. It has wrecked one department after another regardless of the consequences of its action upon the health and lives of the people of our city.

"It has driven out men trained by years of study and experience to satisfy the greed of job seekers; some of the most responsible positions are filled with dealers instead of experts. It has counted upon the distractions of the times and upon the public's general indifference to the inner workings of city administration. It has gone, however, just one step too far in attempting to raid the Division of Industrial Hygiene. In doing that it is robbing the worker of his only asset—his health—and makes him ready victim to occupational diseases, which, though incident to many an industry, are entirely preventable."

The Council of Women's Organizations, embracing 400 organizations of women, of which Mrs. Charles C. Rumsey is Chairman and Mrs. Willard Straight Vice Chairman, made public yesterday a resolution addressed to Mayor Hylan and Commissioner Copeland urging that the Division of Industrial Hygiene be restored to the Bureau of Preventable Diseases. The resolution said that the "vast increase in diversified industry during the war calls for correspondingly greater municipal provision for the study and application of industrial hygiene in New York City, the greatest centre of industry in the Western Hemisphere."

The resolution also recited that, "under Dr. Harris, the city Division of Industrial Hygiene has acquired a national and international reputation for valuable original work, and has contributed materially to the increased safety of workers employed in hazardous occupations."

WAGE ADVANCE IN FACTORIES

Labor Department Reports 81 Per Cent. Rise in Four Years.

A report just issued by the State Department of Labor says that for the period from June, 1914, to October, 1918, the average wages of office employes in factories increased from $10.18 per week to $18.41, or an increase of 26 per cent. During the same period the average wages paid to all employes in factories, shop and office combined, increased 81 per cent., as against a 73 per cent. increase in the retail price of food. The report adds:

"In considering the percentages of increase in office salaries for the above period in industries, it is seen that in the stone, clay and glass industry the increase is 46 per cent.; in clothing, 34 per cent.; in wood manufactures, 33 per cent.; in paper, leather, and rubber goods, 31 per cent.; in textiles, 29 per cent.; in metals and machinery, 28 per cent.; in chemicals, 26 per cent.; in light and power, 25 per cent., and in foods, liquors, and Tobacco, 16 per cent."

GARMENT WORKERS VOTE FOR A STRIKE

Union Demands a 44-Hour Week and a Wage Advance of 15 Per Cent.

MANUFACTURERS TO MEET

Walkout Postponed Till Next Week, In the Hope That a Settlement May Be Arrived At.

A strike has been called by the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union to take effect on a day to be determined next week, unless the Dress and Waist Manufacturers' Association agrees to meet the demand of the workers for a forty-four-hour week and a 15 per cent. wage increase. The announcement was made at a mass meeting of workers held in Madison Square Garden yesterday afternoon by Elmer Rosenberg, Secretary of the union, who said that the strike vote taken during the week had demonstrated that 12,721 of the 25,000 members of the union who voted were in favor of the strike and 105 opposed.

The Dress and Waist Manufacturers' Association last night announced that a meeting of its membership would be held at the Waldorf at 7 o'clock on Tuesday evening to outline the definite policy of the association to its members. Union leaders in deferring the strike hoped yesterday that the manufacturers would meet their demands.

The principal speaker at the mass meeting was Frank Morrison, Secretary of the American Federation of Labor, who told the workers they were entirely justified in their demands. Capitalists, he said, had been referring to strikers in general as Bolsheviki, whereas the real Bolsheviki were the "employers in big industries, such as the Steel Trust." In the present controversy, he added, employers have the solution of the matter in their own hands. If they desire harmony they can enter into a bargain with their employes as to both the wage question and the hours of labor.

Mr. Morrison was interrupted by a woman who inquired whether or not the American Federation of Labor would get a new trial for Mooney, the convicted Californian labor leader. Mr. Morrison replied that Mooney had the backing of the American Federation of Labor in his efforts to get a re-hearing of his case.

Benjamin Schlesinger, President of the union, introduced a strike resolution, which was adopted. It read in part:

"We realize now more than ever that our only protection against all assaults on the part of our employers lies in our organization; that our organization alone will shield us from the inhuman exploitation to which we have been subjected in the years before we organized our union, and we pledge ourselves with renewed determination and enthusiasm to stand loyally and unflinchingly by our union through all the struggles that may come.

"We hereby authorize the General Executive Board of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union and the Executive Boards of Locals 10, 23, and 25, to exert every effort of the organization to secure for us standards of life which will enable us and our families to live with the degree of decency becoming to American citizens, and we hereby solemnly bind ourselves to support our organization in such efforts with all of the means and resources at our command."

Mayor Hylan yesterday had conferences with representatives of the union and Harry A. Gordon, counsel for the Dress and Waist Manufacturers' Association. Both sides of the case were presented to the Mayor. Counsel for the manufacturers will meet the Mayor on next Tuesday and the representatives of the union later in the week.

NEED 500 WOMEN VISITORS.

Red Cross to Provide for Homes of Discharged Men.

A call for 500 women volunteers to aid in visiting the families of discharged soldiers and sailors was sent out by the Home Service Section of the Red Cross for Manhattan and Bronx, 353 Fifth Avenue, yesterday. "These families are suffering," said Mrs. John McGlenn, Chairman of the section, "because there are not enough visitors to handle the thousands of applications made at the section office. Allotments and payments have not been made and the visitors are needed to check up the statements of the soldiers and their families. Women volunteers with education, tact, and a deep interest in the work are asked to report at the office."

Autographed letters of celebrated men are offered at low prices at the Red Cross Shop, 387 Fifth Avenue. Among the writers are Zola, Edwin Arnold, Captain Dreyfus, President Diaz of Mexico, and Jules Verne. A letter from Theodore Roosevelt has just sold for $15.

DANIELS TO ENFORCE LABOR BOARD'S DECREES

Bethlehem Company Must Comply with Wage Order, He Tells Taft.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—Every power of the Navy Department will be used to force the acceptance by companies with which it has contracts of awards made by the War Labor Board, Secretary Daniels said today, after a conference with Joint Chairman Taft of the board, on the situation growing out of the Bethlehem Steel Company's refusal to put into operation one of these awards.

Mr. Daniels said he was taking up the question of how the department should proceed. It appeared, he said, that the Bethlehem Company had agreed some months ago to permit collective bargaining and the establishment of shop committees among its employes, but as soon as the armistice was signed "the company lost interest."

No hint was given as to what form the Navy Department's action might take, but Mr. Daniels said that every contract let by the navy included a cancellation clause. The War Department has more and larger contracts with the Bethlehem Company than the navy.

Mr. Taft announced later that the War Labor Board would defer for ten days its decision on the complaint of Bethlehem Steel Company employes that the company had not lived up to the terms of awards.

Mr. Taft said that during the interval the board would investigate munition contracts held by the company to determine whether the Government had allowed the corporation money to pay the increased wages which the board awards.

Navy officials have arranged conferences with the War Department in order that a common plan of action might be agreed upon in dealing with the situation.

QUIZ TEACHER ON TROTZKY.

Glassberg Faces Charge of Upholding Bolsheviists In School.

Benjamin Glassberg, a teacher in the Commercial High School, Brooklyn, has been suspended for alleged utterance of Bolshevist doctrines made in the classroom. At a meeting of the Teachers' Union on Friday evening Mr. Glassberg presented his side of the case, and it was decided to give him the union's moral and financial support in his fight to retain his position.

It is charged against the teacher that among his comments made in the classroom upon the Russian situation were:

"The publication of the truth about Bolshevism was prohibited by the State Department.

"Red Cross workers, returning from Russia, have been prohibited by the Government to tell the truth about affairs there.

"A public school teacher is not allowed to tell the truth about those matters."

Resolutions have been prescribed for the conduct of public forums in the schools. Among them are the following: Only those speakers who are known to be positively loyal to the Government, and to the ideals and traditions of the nation, will be allowed to address the audience. "The Star-Spangled Banner" will precede every meeting.

Mr. Glassberg said in regard to the charges:

"I was asked in the classroom last Tuesday whether I thought Lenine and Trotzky were German spies, and I replied that I didn't think so, and quoted from several noted Bolsheviists. I was trapped by the questions asked, which I had to answer as I did or lie, and I didn't choose to lie."

Twelve boys of his class, he said, had been selected by the principal of the school, with regard to their religious convictions, to do questioning. He declared that the Board of Education was "trying to use the teachers to further its own views of history."

VOTE ON FOOD BILL DELAYED IN SENATE

Opposition Develops, but Supporters of Measure Expect to Pass It Tomorrow.

BORAH ASSAILS HOOVER

Declares He Has Yielded to Monopolies—Kenyon Against Government Charity in Europe.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—After many hours of debate the Senate failed tonight to reach a vote on the bill, already passed by the House, appropriating $100,000,000 for European famine relief, as urged by President Wilson. Despite the outspoken opposition of some members, Republican and Democratic leaders expressed the belief that the measure would be put through on Monday, they had hoped to pass it before adjournment tonight.

Senator Martin, the Democratic leader, and Senator Lodge spoke in favor of the measure, while Senators Borah of Idaho and Kenyon of Iowa, Republicans, led the opposition. Senator Myers of Montana, Democrat, also said he could not give the bill his support.

The opposition was based on alleged lack of authority of Congress to appropriate money, raised from the people by taxation, for European charity, and also because, it was asserted, sufficient information justifying the appropriation had not been submitted to Congress.

Objection to feeding peoples of enemy countries also was raised, and the Senate adopted an amendment by Senator Lodge adding Austria, Turkey, and Bulgaria, besides Germany, to the countries which shall not share in distribution of the fund. The Lodge amendment provides, however, that it shall not prevent food distribution to the peoples of Armenia, Syria, Greece, and the Christian and Jewish peoples under the yoke of enemy Governments.

Borah Attacks Hoover.

During the debate Herbert Hoover, American Food Administrator, was sharply attacked by Senators Borah and Kenyon, who charged that his administration had favored the meat packing interests. Senator Borah also asserted that Mr. Hoover's work had been carried out without thought of the interests of American taxpayers. Under Mr. Hoover's administration, Senator Borah said the packers had made larger profits in 1917 than ever before, and he demanded that President Wilson have the European work placed in the hands of some one more responsive to taxpayers' interests.

In support of the bill, Senator Martin cited precedents dating back to 1912, of similar relief appropriations by Congress, and Senator Lodge said the $100,000,000 appropriation was necessary to carry out the general work of this nation in concluding the war.

Opposition developed immediately after Senator Martin called up the bill. Senator Myers demanded to know under what constitutional clause Congress could raise money by taxes and then practically give it away to foreign people.

Senator Martin said such relief appropriations had been made many times and cited a number of precedents including the appropriation of $800,000 for Italian earthquake sufferers in 1909.

Senator Kenyon declared he did not believe it proper that the people of this country should be compelled to give to a charity fund for the aid of foreign nations, and that the relief should be carried out through private subscriptions. He contended that Congress had no right to take the money of the people by taxation for charity outside the country. Statements intending to show why the bill should be passed, he said, were indefinite, and declared that President Wilson got his information only from Mr. Hoover.

"Perhaps this is the result of secret diplomacy in Europe," the Senator said. "I wish the President would serve notice that if the foreign nations insist on the secret diplomacy now going on at Paris he and his staff will return to this country and also withdraw our army from Europe and let Europe go it alone."

Referring to President Wilson's statement that food would stop Bolshevism, Senator Kenyon declared:

"You will stop the Bolsheviki, not by feeding them, but by removing injustices."

Before giving relief to Europe the situation in the United States should be considered, Senator Kenyon said, adding that thousands of men are out of employment in the United States, and that there are inadequate hospital facilities to care for the return of wounded soldiers.

Thinks Packers Control.

Senator Borah said it was impossible for him to support the bill because of the connection Herbert Hoover would have with the disposition of the funds.

"Hoover's viewpoint is such," he said, "that I can't agree to turn over this money to him."

Senator Borah said investigation showed that "three vast monopolies that controlled the food supply have directed and controlled the Food Administration since he has been in charge. By this," he said, "he did not intend to say that Mr. Hoover had benefited in any way, but that it was Hoover's viewpoint that permitted this to be done."

"While express dispatches have described suffering at home for lack of food, the Idaho Senator said the packers admitted that their war profits were 47 per cent. on capital invested. Passage of the bill, he asserted, would increase the packers' profits. He contended that it would be unjust to hold the President responsible for proper relief distribution, as he would not know how the money was spent.

URGES NATION TO MOURN.

Honoring of Roosevelt Transcends Party Belief, Says Baker.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—By direction of Secretary Baker, Grosvenor B. Clarkson, director of the Council of National Defense, today requested all State, county, community, and municipal Councils of Defense to do everything possible to make successful the nation-wide arrangement for memorial services for Theodore Roosevelt, to be held on Feb. 9, at the same time that services are held by Congress.

"Because of the peculiarly non-partisan character of the great Council of Defense system," said the telegram, "it is singularly fitting that the foregoing action should be taken. The honoring of Theodore Roosevelt is a matter that transcends party belief and personal prejudice. He lived greatly for America and that is enough to justify even those who opposed him in mourning his death."

PLANS TO HONORROOSEVELT

Memorial Committee Embarrassed by Wealth of Suggestion.

OYSTER BAY, Jan. 18.—Members of the committee in charge of plans for the Roosevelt Memorial in this village met this evening and announced that they would not be able to make a report for a week or two, as they had so many suggestions under consideration.

Letters from all over the country have reached the committee, and prominent citizens have not only asked that they be included in any plan to raise funds, but offered suggestions as to what would be most fitting.

"Roosevelt Park" may be laid out near the railroad station as a fitting memorial, or it may be decided to erect a granite shaft in the centre of the town.

William Loeb, Jr., formerly Secretary to President Roosevelt, is Chairman of the committee.

In many departments not included in "January Sale" drastic price cuts have also been made to clear the decks for the New, arriving daily.

The New Suit Dress

Exploits its charm in these two models so delightfully that, although their slim skirts once more limit our gait to the straight and narrow, we are consoled by their undoubted smartness and individuality.

Sketch A shows a smart wool velour which looks like a suit, is really a dress, and will serve you as either. A rich brocaded vest of black and gold gives distinction, as do also the antique silver buttons at neck and sleeves. Colors: Henna, Reindeer, Burgundy, Navy and Blue—

Special 26.75

When is a panel not a panel? is not so facetious as it sounds, for this clever suit dress (Sketch B) has a panel at the back which will either button down to the cuff of the skirt or, with equally smart effect, will fold up and flip its end into a fetching collar. This versatile costume is of fine navy blue serge. The coat is lined with victory red satin and opens to show a high satin vest, also of victory red—

STRIKERS' EVIDENCE STIRS BOAT OWNERS

Testimony Given Before War Labor Board Called "Arrant Socialism."

DISPUTE "LIVING WAGE"

Witness for Workers Sticks to His Declaration That $1,800 a Year Is Needed for Comfort Here.

The charge that doctrines of "arrant sicilism" were being read into the evidence to be used by the National War Labor Board in making its decision upon a wage scale, and on the proposal for an eight-hour day for marine workers in this port, was made yesterday by Paul Bonynge, counsel for the boat owners, at the meeting of the subcommittee in City Hall. Argument upon this charge and upon other points of difference between counsel so impeded the introduction of evidence that the four members of the subcommittee of the War Labor Board themselves took over the questioning of witnesses for about fifteen minutes.

Mr. Bonynge made his assertion after Ben Howe, Secretary of the Community Councils of Defense, who had been summoned by the union leaders as an expert on the cost of living, had declared his belief that $1,900 should be fixed as a minimum wage for all workers in this city. Upon questioning by counsel, he expressed belief that policemen, firemen and postmen, and other public employes, who received less than $1,500, were underpaid, but he added that to increase the wages of municipal workers further "would force the city into bankruptcy." It was his opinion that the city could not float another big loan," while taxes were already so high, that more pay to municipal employes would throw upon the property owners' taxes that were too heavy for them.

When Mr. Howe expressed his opinion that there should be no variation from the minimum wage because a worker was not an American, or happened to be "floating" from port to port, or had no wife, children, or other dependents, adding emphatically that he would advocate $1,800 as such minimum wage, Mr. Bonynge addressed an argument to the members of the board. Counsel remarked that throughout the trial the lawyers for the unions had introduced witnesses who talked only upon minimum wages without regard for conditions of industry, and that counsel had been advancing sicialistic doctrines in their arguments and questions to witnesses.

Frank P. Walsh, counsel for the workers, took issue with Mr. Bonynge, but W. L. Hutcheson, acting yesterday as Chairman of the sub-committee, stopped the argument and directed both sides to confine their remarks to the taking of evidence.

In his testimony Mr. Howe said that every twelfth person in this city was buried in Potters Field and that 20,000 children were wards of the city because their parents were unable to care for them. He asserted that one child in every five was not properly nourished and that all of these conditions were caused by underpaying workers.

"It is not a theory," retorted the witness to a question based upon his minimum wage scale. "It is an upstanding, hard-headed fact that a man cannot get enough to eat, clothes to wear, and keep his family on less than $1,800 a year in New York City. His family cannot have comfort, his children cannot have an education even in the high school, and none of them can have leisure and entertainment on less than $1,500 a year."

Under cross-examination by Theodore H. Burgess, counsel for the United States Railroad Administration, the witness admitted that increases of pay to workers had been responsible for part of the rise in the cost of living. He said his remedies for the high cost of living were the elimination of middlemen, the establishment of municipal markets, and some measure to increase the buying power of the dollar. Mr. Howe said he had been a manufacturer for several years, and then had become buyer of city supplies for Louisville, Ky., before he came to this city to do similar work under the Mitchel administration. He said he was not a Socialist.

Mayor Hylan's letter to Ernest Bohm, President of the Central Federated Union, denouncing Captain James A. Maher, Vice President of the Marine Affiliation, caused more dissension at the hearing yesterday, although at the opening of the session Chairman Hutcheson warned counsel for both sides that no further personalities would be tolerated, because the members of the committee wished to take only the evidence upon the demands of the unions and the condition of the tow boat business as quickly as possible.

After a sharp discussion, counsel for both sides were called to order by Chairman Hutcheson, while Arthur E. Driscoll, counsel for the Marine Engineers Union, was permitted to read extracts from the letter, but when he sought to consider the authenticity of the letter, Chairman Hutcheson interrupted.

"Let the Mayor prove his charges if you seek proof," he admonished. "Take your controversy to the courts. This is the War Labor Board, convened to render a decision in this labor dispute, and we're not a court of law."

In the confusion the lawyer shouted to Captain Maher, who was on the stand, a question as to "why the Mayor wrote that letter" and Maher retorted that probably it was because he "was intimate with boat owners." Captain Maher picked up a newspaper clipping showing a picture of Mayor Hylan and Joseph J. O'Brien, a boat owner, basking on the sands at Palm Beach. Chairman Hutcheson ordered the last part of the colloquy stricken from the records, and warned counsel that "this committee is not interested in any personalities between Mayor Hylan and Captain Maher."

Members of the committee then took up the questioning themselves upon the plans made by the unions for running the boats on the eight-hour day schedule with three crews instead of two under the present agreement. Counsel for the Railroad Administration said that the basic eight-hour day had already been approved by the Director General of Railroads, and that it had been put into operation in all branches where there was no question of impracticability. In the operation of some of the railroad tugs and lighters in this port, he said, there was some question of impracticability.

Counsel for the boat owners also sought to show upon cross-examination of Captain Maher that he had been mistaken in asserting that a towing company had charged 300 to 400 per cent. increase in rates for taking mud scows to sea. It was brought out that the distance of towing had been increased ten miles, and the size of the scow greatly increased for each trip. Other witnesses were introduced yesterday in attempts to show that the wages of deckhands and other marine workers were not sufficient. The hearings will be resumed in the Board of Estimate room in the City Hall at 10 o'clock on Monday morning.

RUMELY WANTS TRIAL HERE.

Counsel Obtains Habeas Corpus Writ Returnable Saturday.

United States Commissioner Hitchcock having decided that Dr. Edward A. Rumely, late publisher of The Evening Mail, should answer in Washington the indictment found against him in this jurisdiction for alleged violation of the Trading with the Enemy act, his counsel yesterday obtained from Federal Judge Mayer a writ of habeas corpus returnable next Saturday.

It is alleged that Dr. Rumely failed to report to the Alien Property Custodian that he held certain shares of stock of The Evening Mail, which it was alleged were German-owned, and that he owed the German Government $1,451,700. The desire of the Government to have the trial take place in Washington was resisted on the ground that it would make necessary the transportation of witnesses and a great many documents, and would embarras the defendant.

Senate Committee on Commerce Issues Report Advocating Congress Action.

TO FOSTER FOREIGN TRADE

Abolishing of Delay in Re-export a Feature—Changes in Pending Bill Favored.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—The Senate Committee on Commerce today made public a special report from the United States Tariff Commission urging the need of immediate action by Congress in favor of the creation of free zones in the ports of the United States.

The report was submitted in response to a resolution adopted by the Senate on May 13, 1918, following the introduction in Congress of the Sheppard-Sanders bill, which calls for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of free zones in American ports, and deals with a subject of great importance to the development of American foreign trade and the full use of the reviving American merchant marine.

The Sheppard-Sanders bill seeks to bring about the adoption at American ports of a plan well known and long in successful operation, notably at Hamburg and Copenhagen, whereby vessels engaged in foreign commerce are relieved from the burdens and delays incident to Custom House procedure, which cannot be eliminated by an amendment to present laws governing Custom House administration. The free zone policy has no relation to the fiscal plans of the Government, but furnishes opportunity, in the opinion of the members of the Tariff Commission, for avoiding delay and unnecessary procedure in the re-export of goods partly or wholly of foreign origin.

Made Exhaustive Inquiry.

Before submitting its report, which is signed by Chairman F. W. Taussig, Thomas Walker Page, David J. Lewis, William Kent, W. S. Culberson, and Edward D. Costigan, the Tariff Commission held hearings in New York City and Philadelphia, made investigations at New Orleans and Galveston, sent out questionnaires to several hundred merchants and shippers, interviewed men familiar with free zone practice, made a study of the history and working of the free ports of free zones in Europe and of the laws and regulations controlling them.

In its report the commission favors the establishment of the proposed free zones, but suggests certain important amendments in the pending Sheppard-Sanders bill. The commission argues that the free zone will encourage and expedite that part of the nation's foreign trade which its Government wishes to free from the restrictions necessitated by customs duties, and that it should foster the dealing in foreign goods that are imported, not for domestic consumption, but for re-export to foreign markets, and for conditioning, or for combining with domestic products previous to export.

"The policy of the United States," says the report, "has not been unfavorable to the kind of commerce that the free zone is designed to promote. On the contrary, it has been the obvious intention of the Government to relieve re-export trade from the restrictions to the administration of the tariff and customs laws."

The board points out that to that end three institutions had been devised. These are the bonded warehouse, the bonded manufacturing warehouse and the drawback, which latter is the repayment of 99 per cent. of the duties paid on imported goods, when they are exported.

Present System Criticised.

"The provision and retention of these three devices," the report argues, "show clearly that it has not been the purpose of the United States Government to place unnecessary obstacles in the way of its citizens when engaged in international trade. That such obstacles have arisen is due to the fact that the three devices mentioned are wholly inadequate to relieve foreign commerce from the regulations and restrictions placed upon the importation of foreign goods of domestic consumption. It would therefore involve no change of policy to supplement these devices by a system of free ports or free zones such as have proved singularly effective in other countries."

The commission explains in detail the inadequacy of the bonding and drawback devices showing how certain of their features detract from their usefulness in facilitating American foreign commerce. It emphasizes the limited usefulness of the bonded storage warehouse so far as export trade is concerned. The commission points out that the intent of the law authorizing what is known as the drawback is to aid production for foreign markets by relieving from customs dues imported materials that are manufactured or finished in this country and then shipped abroad, but asserts that the relief thus afforded, excepting the sugar and tinplate industries, has been relatively small and undertakes to prove this by presenting to the Senate Commission a table dealing with the principal imported articles used in the manufacture of articles exported upon which drawback was paid.

The report cites many illustrations, in detail, of the inadequacy of the present system, describes the advantages of the free zone and improved port facilities, discusses the effect of the proposed new facilities, the business proper to a free zone, the importance of transshipment trade, pointing out the decline in the transshipment trade of the United States, and emphasizes the need of recovering it.

Maritime Trade Expanding.

"The chief causes for the decline of the American maritime enterprise no longer operate," says the report. "The outbreak of the present war has again forced the United States into a position of prominence of international trade. It has devolved upon this country to find capital, to furnish ships, to modify her own production and to assemble and redistribute many products of other lands. Widespread interest has been aroused and considerable investments have been made in this long neglected field. For the promotion of foreign trade new corporations have been formed and old ones expanded, a great merchant marine is now under construction, the banks have extended their foreign agencies and created new ones. Indeed, it is not too much to say that American business as a whole tends to be reorganized on the basis of a permanent widespread and varied foreign commerce in which Americans shall be active participants.

"Even before the war it was already generally recognized that industry was becoming constantly more dependent on foreign markets, and that to secure and maintain these it was necessary not only to provide goods that foreigners might want, but also to furnish in return a market for their products.

"The present war by no means created the need for commercial expansion, but it has emphasized the need for it and has powerfully stimulated the growth of it. It has enabled, and indeed compelled, the United States to occupy a place in the world's commerce the retention and improvement of which will greatly contribute to her future welfare. Thoughtful men everywhere now see in the expansion of our foreign trade an added benefit to our international prosperity."

Held Man in Red Cross Uniform.

Charles Thomas, a very young man, was held in $100 bail yesterday by United States Commissioner Hitchcock to answer a charge of wearing the uniform of a Second Lieutenant of the Red Cross without legal right. The prisoner made no attempt to dispute the charge after the Red Cross denied knowledge of him. The prisoner has a number of ardent letters from young girls.

EXPECTS MIGRATION OF JEWS

—Emigration of Jews from America, not immigration into the country, is to be expected in the years that are ahead, in the opinion of Dr. B. Rosenblath, who spoke yesterday at the First Jewish Labor Congress in the Yorkville Casino, Eighty-sixth Street near Third Avenue. Many persons now living here will be anxious to get back to their native lands so as to help their relatives reestablish their homes. This condition should hold for the next three or four years, he thought.

The congress, called by the Jewish National Workmen's Committee, brought together 400 delegates representing 500,000 members of organized labor. The Jewish workingmen expect to handle problems that affect other countries through the labor organizations of those countries rather than through Governmental channels.

The taxing of Jewish workers 1 per cent. of their wages for the relief of Jews in Poland, Russia, and other war-stricken countries was advocated by Holmes B. Zuckerman, manager of the Jewish Relief Society.

Mr. Zuckerman spoke on the needs of those who live in the countries ravaged by war.

The rehabilitation of Palestine was the subject of talks by Dr. B. Hoffman and Dr. Charles Jitlovsky. They believe the Jewish republic should be modeled after that of the United States. Today the Resolution Committee will submit a resolution on the subject of the new Jewish republic, and this is expected to embody the suggestion that the new Government in Palestine be modeled after this country and that the rights of all inhabitants be safeguarded.

CONSUL SILLIMAN DEAD.

American at Guadalajara Was Prisoner of Mexican Federals in 1914.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—John P. Silliman, American Consul at Guadalajara, Mexico, and a classmate of President Wilson in the Princeton graduating class of 1879, died last night at his post in Mexico. The State Department was notified today that Mr. Silliman's death resulted from a clot on the heart after he had partially recovered from an attack of influenza.

Mr. Silliman, one of the best known members of the American Consular Service in Mexico, lived for ten years, engaged in farming, near Saltillo, prior to 1907, when he was appointed American Deputy Consul there. While serving as American Consul at Saltillo in the Spring of 1914, Mr. Silliman was placed under arrest and held prisoner by the Mexican Federals. For a month the State Department had received no word from Mr. Silliman, and it was believed that he had been executed.

Early in May, 1914, William Jennings Bryan, then Secretary of State, made renewed efforts to get into communication with Mr. Silliman, but his efforts failed. Later the French Legation in Mexico reported Mr. Silliman safe. Mr. Silliman was turned over to the Brazilian Minister and was told he must leave Mexico. General Maass was trying to accuse Mr. Silliman of aiding the rebels in Mexico. Mr. Silliman was released, sent to Mexico City, and returned to the United States in June of that year. In 1915 and 1916 he was assigned to special duty in Mexico by President Wilson, and on July 12, 1916, was sent to Guadalajara as Consul.

7,734 TROOPS GET STORMY TRIP HOME

Transport Steers South for Convalescents, Cruiser Halts for Operation.

ALL CHEERY ON ARRIVAL

Saddest Man Is New Yorker Who Broke His Leg Going East and Missed Part of Fighting.

Nearly 8,000 troops arrived yesterday from France after a stormy voyage across the Atlantic on the United States cruisers South Dakota and Montana and the transport President Grant, which brought 4,891 officers and men out of the total of 7,734.

Mayor Sunderland of Danbury, Conn., and a committee from that city went down the Bay on the police boat Patrol to greet the South Dakota, which had on board the 56th Regiment of Coast Artillery, less Battery F and thirty officers detached, among her complement of 1,540 troops. The regiment was formed of New England men, and the majority of them were sent to Fort Terry and the remainder to Camp Devens.

About 500 of the men hailed from the State of Connecticut. According to stories of the soldiers, confirmed by the naval crew, the South Dakota received a considerable buffeting on the voyage. The waves rolled over her decks, smashing rafts and dashing six of the seamen against the steel houses on deck with such force that they had to go into the ship's hospital. Captain J. M. Lubby, the commander, was knocked down on the bridge by a forty-foot sea and had to lie up in his cabin for five days, while Commander T. F. Caldwell and Lieutenant F. T. Montgomery were also thrown and badly hurt.

When the wind from the northwest was blowing its hardest the Captain slowed the South Dakota down to five knots to enable Major Crestman of the United States Army Medical Corps to perform an operation for appendicitis on Corporal E. O. Williams of Battery C of the 56th, who had been taken ill after the cruiser sailed from France.

The surgeon was assisted by Lieut. Commander C. I. Wood and was successful in the operation. The patient was still weak when the cruiser reached Hoboken yesterday morning, but he was smiling and cheerful and said to those around that "it was bully to be home in America once again."

The troops on the President Grant were mostly from the Field Artillery, and included the headquarters company of the 8th Field Artillery, 2 officers and 41 men, and the following other regiments of that service: 2d, 32 officers, 1,434 men; 81st, 32 officers, 1,294 men; 83d, 23 officers, 1,371 men. There were from Company H, 347th Infantry, 4 officers and 207 men. All these troops are regulars. The artillery went to Camp Mills and the infantry to Camp Merritt.

The transport left Brest on Jan. 5 and ran into heavy weather the second day out, when the soldiers had to be battened down below, and the surgeon, going his rounds, discovered that 150 cases of influenza had developed from the germs brought on board by the troops from Brest. Three of the patients died, Sergeant Edward Barnes of Iowa, with the Headquarters Co., 83d Field Artillery; Leroy B. Foltz, Co. M, 1st Pioneer Infantry, whose home was at Sterling Station, N. Y., and Dorian Fanning, Co. D, 6th Machine Gun Company, who lived in Illinois. In order that the sick men should rest easier, Captain Carey W. Cole steered to the southward and the ship had finer weather.

Among the unattached officers on the President Grant were two aviators, Lieutenant Arthur M. Clark of Jamaica Plain, Boston, 102d Aero Squadron, and Lieutenant Van H. Burgin of Atlanta, Ga., of the 134th Aero Squadron, who had been together in a German prison. Bergin was brought down in the Argonne with a bullet in his leg on Sept. 23 and Clark on Sept. 17 in the St. Mihiel district.

Burgin was put through a severe examination by a German artillery Captain, who spoke good English, and he replied: "You are wasting time on me, Captain. A Second Lieutenant in the United States Army is not supposed to know anything."

The two American officers were taken to a camp at Karlsruhe, where the food and living conditions were bad but they were not ill-treated. There were about 231 American prisoners there. Two days before the armistice was signed, Lieutenants Clark and Burgin were taken to Baden, where the conditions were worse. They did not take the revolution seriously in that part of Germany, the officers said, and when machine guns were brought into the streets everybody ran away and hid in cellars.

Captain A. F. Patterson, an aviator whose home is in this city, was accompanied by his bride, whom he had married in France.

Several of the wounded men on board were from New York and Brooklyn, and had taken part in the fighting at Chateau-Thierry, Argonne, and St. Mihiel. The saddest of them was Harry S. Stewart, 301 West 109th Street, of the 7th Marine Replacement Company, who fell down on the deck of the transport that took him to France and broke his leg.

Sergeant Louis S. Smith of Scranton, Penn., was on crutches yesterday, but was cheerful, and enjoyed the welcome from the band and Red Cross workers at the pier in Hoboken. He was with Company I of the 134th Infantry in the hard fighting at Verdun. He said that he was the only survivor of seventy of his company, who were all killed except Smith, by a high explosive shell which burst over them on Sept. 30, after they had been fighting steadily for nearly seventy-two hours.

The U. S. cruiser Montana brought 71 officers and 1,304 men, including the 1st Trench Mortar Battalion, 25 officers and 662 enlisted men; 4th Trench Mortar Battalion, 29 officers and 632 enlisted men, and a detail of 17 officers of the 56th Coast Artillery. All went to Camp Mills.

The transports due today are the Lapland with 95 officers and 1,040 men; Wilhelmina, with 1,041 troops, and the hospita ship Comfort, 7 officers and 231 men.

CHURCHES PLAN WAR DRIVE.

Confer Tomorrow on Means to Raise $10,000,000.

A series of conferences in preparation for the drive for $10,000,000 for the Inter-Church Emergency Fund in February will begin in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church tomorrow night. Representatives of the fourteen Protestant churches to engage in the work after the war will discuss the plans for the campaign and the spending of the money.

The Rev. Dr. Theodore Irving Reese, Bishop Coadjutor of the Episcopal Diocese of Southern Ohio, who is Chairman of the general committee in charge of the movement, will preside, and the other speakers will be Bishop Luther B. Wilson of the Methodist Episcopal Church and Robert E. Speer, Chairman of the General Wartime Commission of the Churches. There will be music by a united choir of seventy-five voices from the fourteen co-operating churches, led by Harold Gleason, organist of the Fifth Avenue Church.

In giving an outline of the plan for the work the announcement said: "The chaplain service will be maintained and expanded, troops returning from Europe will be met and assisted, active ministration will go on at war camps and munition centres in this country, and some of the churches are about to undertake the extensive programs to help in the regions of Europe devastated by the war."

BANKER'S WIDOW, 66, WEDS CHAUFFEUR, 24

Mrs. Helen Grant, Sewaren, N. J., Clubwoman, Marries William Tombs of Rahway.

TO HONEYMOON IN SOUTH

Relatives of the Couple Attend the Ceremony at St. John's Cathedral Here.

Mrs. Helen Glidden Grant of Sewaren, N. J., widow of Frederick Fierman Grant, the banker, was married yesterday afternoon to William H. Tombs of Rahway, N. J., who has been her chauffeur for the last three years. The bride is about 65 years old, and her husband is 24.

The ceremony was performed in the presence of relatives of the couple at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, this city, at 3 o'clock, the officiating clergyman being the Rev. H. A. Sadtler, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church at Rahway.

The bride is prominent in society at Sewarin, and is the organizer of the Civic and History Clubs of that place, being President of the latter club at the present time. Her first husband, who died in July, 1915, was connected with the First National Bank of New York for forty years when he retired several years before his death, and was Senior Warden of St. John's Church of Sewaren, also a Governor of the Land and Water Club.

Mr. Tombs is the son of Mrs. Margaret Tombs of 14 Cottage Street, Rahway, where he has lived all his life, and where he attended school. He is a member of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics in his home town, a patriotic organization. His sister, Mrs. Donald Nichols, and her husband, who were recently married, attended the wedding ceremony.

They will spend their honeymoon in the South.

ENDS WORK AT NEUILLY.

Dr. Blake's Ambulance Hospital to be Returned to France.

Mrs. Robert Bacon, Chairman of the American Committee that raised funds for the maintenance of American Military Hospital No. 1, at Neuilly, near Paris, announced yesterday that the work of the institution had been completed and that it would be closed soon. When it was first organized under the direction of Dr. Joseph A. Blake, it was known as the Ambulance Hospital.

"Patients are being evacuated, and provision is being made for the early return of the building to the French Government to be used as a school," said the announcement. "Four or five months may be required, but the committee has on hand sufficient funds for the diminishing needs of the hospital, and no further subscriptions will be solicited. Whatever balance may be left will be turned over to the former American Hospital at Neuilly, which held itself responsible for the Ambulance Hospital and the American Ambulance Service in the beginning of the war, and which has been especially serviceable in the care of American officers in the last eighteen months.

"In bringing to a close the labors of so many months, the committee feels a pardonable pride in the effectiveness and value of its achievement. It aimed to provide for the stilled wounded nothing less than the best medical, surgical, and nursing care, and it finds its justification in the notably high record of lives saved and of men restored to health or fitted for careers of usefulness. The ardent and devoted sacrifice of physicians, surgeons, nurses, and attendants has been made available by the patriotism and generosity of thousands in all parts of our country who have contributed through the American Committee more than $2,000,000 for the maintenance of this work. After Chateau-Thierry the capacity of the hospital was expanded from 375 beds to 2,000, and for an extended period from 600 to 800 new cases were received every day."

ROCHAMBEAU DELAYED.

Obliged to Put in at Halifax on Her Voyage Here.

The agents of the French Line at 17 State Street received a wireless dispatch yesterday from Captain Juhain of the liner Rochambeau stating that on account of rough weather and poor coal he was putting in at Halifax. It was expected that this would delay the arrival of the steamship at New York until next Wednesday.

In addition to her regular civilian passengers the Rochambeau has 883 American troops on board. They included parts of the 337th and 339th Field Artillery of the 88th Division and medical detachments and fifty casual officers.

Dispatches received last night from Halifax stated that up to 6 P. M. no word had been received from the Rochambeau.

TO HASTEN RECALL OF FORCES ABROAD

Foch and Pershing Conferring Over Our Army's Size, Says General March.

MINIMUM ONLY TO REMAIN

1,177,000 Troops in the United States Are Already Listed for Demobilization.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—The policy of the American Government relative to the retention of troops in Europe as disclosed today by General Peyton C. March, Chief of Staff, will be to keep there only such a force as will be "consistent with our international obligations."

While there is considerable leeway in this statement, it was made plain by General March that it was not the purpose of this Government to maintain in France anything like thirty divisions of troops. Marshal Foch has been notified of this policy by General Pershing, and Marshal Foch and the American Army representatives in France are now computing the number of divisions to be held there.

"I can say definitely," said General March, "that it will not be anything like thirty divisions. Thirty divisions would be approximately 1,440,000 men, including combatants and noncombatants behind the line."

General March also expressed the opinion that the allied force in France would be able fully to handle any emergency situation. This opinion was drawn from the General when it was pointed out to him that a dispatch had come from London a few days ago saying that the British thought they might have to revise their intentions with respect to demobilization because of fear that there would be a resumption of warfare "somewhere."

"Have you any light to throw on that?" General March was asked.

Force for Any Emergency.

"No," replied the Chief of Staff. "I saw what was in the papers, but we have absolutely nothing official on that business. The force which the allied powers have in France is fully able to handle any military problem which may arise. It would be absolutely impossible for Germany to do anything in face of the force we now have there, and of course Marshal Foch would not allow the force to be cut down to the point where we could not handle any emergency. We have nothing official on England's attitude."

"Some time ago," it was suggested to General March, "there was a statement that thirty divisions would be allowed to remain abroad for the time being. Has there been any change in that figure?"

It was then that General March disclosed that the number to be retained in France would be nowhere like thirty divisions, and made the following statement:

"The War Department does not contemplate keeping in France such a force as thirty divisions. We propose to reduce the force to the lowest figure consistent with our international obligations and to bring back the men from France to the limit of available shipping. In that connection, I will say that negotiations for the use of British, French, and Dutch ships are proceeding very satisfactorily and we have secured a number of ships from all those nations and have a very good chance to get a large proportion of the German ships which are being turned over to the allied powers.

"We have transformed some cargo ships in the United States—our own ships—into transports by putting in bunks and cutting holes for ventilation. We will bring back our men from France as rapidly as possible. We have no intention of keeping any such force as thirty divisions in France."

"Can you indicate about how many divisions will be held there?" General March was asked.

Conferring On Our Army.

"The matter is in adjustment between General Foch and our own people," he replied. "And while the number is not yet definitely determined upon, I can say definitely that it will not be anything like thirty divisions."

"Have you any report as to there being a trade with regard to the German ships?"

"I don't know exactly what you mean by 'trade,' but I have a report from abroad indicating exactly what German ships we asked for, and while the negotiations are not completed, the indications are, as I have stated, that we will get a very substantial part of that tonnage."

General March made an interesting statement of the present situation regarding demobilization. He said he had received complaints that we were demobilizing too fast, asserted that there were two shades of opinion in America on this point, but did not express his own opinion as to whether we were demobilizing too fast.

"During the last week," said General March, "I have issued orders for the demobilization of the remaining half of the combatant divisions, so that now the demobilization orders for the United States include all the troops except those of a permanent character, which I will enumerate.

"In each infantry division, as I announced at the time of their formation, we put two regular regiments of infantry as a nucleus about which these divisions were to be formed, and these regular regiments will be, of course, in the permanent military establishment and will not be demobilized as regiments. In addition to that, we still have in the United States the greater part of the cavalry of the regular army, which is along the border, and Coast Artillery troops in the sea coast defenses. There will be retained, besides, a large medical personnel which will handle all the hospital facilities which we have constructed all over the United States for the use of the sick and convalescent who return from abroad and the number of officers and men necessary to handle these plants are excepted from the demobilization orders at this time.

To Handle Demobilization.

"There is also at each camp what we might call a demobilization detachment, of men who are selected to make the physical examinations of men, fix their papers and records, check up their property, handle their accounts and handle the demobilization generally. These detachments are of selected men, and, as far as possible, of men who want to stay in the service, and their number of course will be quite large because of the number of demobilization camps which are retained for the purpose of receiving the men who come back from France and attending to the details of demobilization.

"There will be at the port of debarkation embarkation personnel, who will remain there also for the obvious purpose of handling the debarkations of troops as they come in. Certain staff corps personnel—quartermaster men and men of that character—who are necessary in the demobilization problems are also excluded from this order, which we have now brought up to include everybody who can be spared.

"The number of men who are still under enlistment contracts in the United States after all the classes I have indicated have been mustered out will be gone over very carefully with the idea of bringing down the number to the minimum necessary to handle the demobilization of troops who are coming home from abroad. I mean, for example, with references to the medical personnel, that we have a personnel large enough to handle everybody who is reported sick and wounded in France, and as that number is cut down we will be able to cut down in the number of medical personnel needed.

Listed for Demobilization.

"The actual number of men now listed for demobilization in the United States is 1,177,000. Orders have been issued to date (Jan. 17) for the demobilization of approximately 1,281,000 men as follows:

104,000 Returned from France.

"The number of men actually returned from France is 104,000; in other words, we have before us for demobilization 1,281,000 men, of whom we have actually discharged, up to the last reports received, 768,626. The number of officers whom we have now dispensed with is 51,593.

"Last week I said something about the different methods used in England and the United States in the demobilization of troops. We have report now of the method used in France, which is still a third method, being different from either the United States or Great Britain. In France, as they have universal military service, demobilization for them means going back from the colors to the reserve, not back to civil life as here and in Great Britain.

"Their idea is to demobilize by classes, beginning with the oldest men. They ordered the demobilization of the classes of 1887, 1888, 1889 to start with, men who came in the service in that year, passed back into the reserve and were called back for the war, men of approximately 50 years of age. Then an order was issued demobilizing the class of 1890, and they are working down, apparently by classes of service, if we can call it that, releasing men from military service with the active list and putting them back for service in the reserve.

"In the classes they give priority to men on the basis of the number of children they have. A man who has four children or more is given priority in his class in demobilization; a widower with three children is advanced in the order in which he is passed out.

"French papers of which we now have copies indicate that they are having about the same difficulty with public opinion as in Great Britain as to the slowness of demobilization. The newspaper comments are sharp, and interpellations in the French Chamber of Deputies follow up the same complaint as to the necessity for more rapid demobilization."

"Have you heard any complaints that we are demobilizing too fast?" General March was asked.

"Yes," he replied. "There apparently are two shades of opinion in America, one of which thinks the War Department is demobilizing too fast and the other thinks it is too slow. The War Department is going forward, with the results which I have given you today, and the machinery which we have now organized in our demobilization camps has practically a maximum capacity of 1,000 men per day per camp; and, as there are about thirty camps, the maximum capacity is about 30,000 men per day.

Retarded by the Holidays.

"We reached that number two weeks in December, but in Christmas and New Year's weeks, because of the holidays and Sundays, we fell back markedly, but then picked up, and while demobilization is not now proceeding at the maximum rate, it is proceeding very rapidly. The figures which I have given you are very largely in excess of what has been done in any other country on which we have figures.

"Some statement has been made in the press that the War Department had directed the American Expeditionary Force to hold up the casualties toward the end of the war. At the opening of Congress in December the Senate Military Affairs Committee had a hearing on the subject of casualties, and the War Department placed before it and in the presence of representatives of the press, all the cablegrams that had been exchanged with General Pershing for a period of six months, in which orders were given to him in the most mandatory form to send in all casualties, and in every case the replies which were read indicated he was doing the best he could.

"Dr. Keppel, Third Assistant Secretary of War, was sent over to the War Department to find out why we were not receiving the reports more rapidly, and the facts that he developed in his experience in France were then given to the Senate Military Affairs Committee, also in the presence of representatives of the press, and the facts of the case are perfectly well known to the people of the country and to all the journals, and, of course, it is not a fact that the War Department issued any such orders.

"The Surgeon General called me up this morning and directed my attention to a newspaper editorial which states that the wounded men who are under reconstruction process, being taught useful employments, had to buy their yarn or other things which they were learning to use, so that they would be self-supporting citizens when they got back to private life. The Surgeon General says the statement is absolutely untrue, and that the Government pays for everything of that kind. If any man has been buying yarn he has done it because he wanted to."

CONFEREES CLOSER TO TAX AGREEMENT

Mutual Concessions Point to Compromise on War Excess Profits Rates.

SETTLE SCHEDULE FOR 1920

That for 1919 Yet to be Agreed Upon—Senate Members Expected to Give Some Ground.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—What appears to be the first definite step toward a compromise on war excess profits taxes payable in 1919 was taken today by the Senate and House conferees on the Revenue bill, when the House conferees agreed to establish a definite rate for war excess profits taxes payable in 1920, and accepted the Senate schedule for the latter period. The single concession that the Senate members of the conference were called upon to make was an 80 per cent. war profits tax payable in 1920, but covering only war contracts which may remain at that time.

The big battle, of course, is over the war excess profits taxes to be paid in 1919, and the only announcement made for publication was that a decision on this matter had been deferred. Representative Kitchin, leader of the House conferees, is reported as still firm for his proposed 80 per cent. war profits tax or the alternative schedule proposed in the original House bill and known as the excess profits method.

The fact that the House conferees had given way to the Senate to the extent of adopting the lower schedule for war excess profits taxes payable in 1920 was generally accepted here as presenting two probabilities: First, that the danger of a deadlock which would end all hope of reaching a compromise agreement was less acute; and, second, that the Senate members would in all probability give some ground and join in a report recommending rates in increase of those which were quoted in their original amendment to the House proposals.

The fact that nothing which indicated an approach to an agreement on the rates on war excess profits taxes, payable in 1919, had been developed up to today had started all sorts of gloomy reports, and there were even rumors afloat that Mr. Kitchin and some of his followers were prepared to refuse to enter an agreement at all rather than make a surrender of the proposed 80 per cent. rate. The outlook now, however, is considered somewhat brighter, the belief being expressed that the House members, before agreeing to accept the Senate rates for taxes payable in 1920, undoubtedly had come to some tentative understanding upon the more important issue, which at least, gave healthy promise of progress.

Some saw significance in the fact that the Senate members were today willing to insert the 80 per cent. rate of taxation on war excess profits to cover war contracts which might remain in 1920, but there probably is little or nothing to the theory that in doing so the Senate conferees were indicating a willingness to adopt the higher House schedule in its entirety for 1919. The tax payable in 1919 will, of course, be higher than that for the subsequent year—even the Senate amendment provides for that—and it is understood on excellent authority that the 80 per cent. tax on war contracts remaining in 1920 was inserted almost wholly for the purpose of preventing any escape from the 1919 war excess profits tax on war contracts by holding them over until the end of the tax year.

The conferees desire, if possible, to complete their deliberations next week. There are many other important matters to be settled, such as the second-class postal rates, the inheritance tax, and other points.

The Senate proposals for the war excess profits payable in 1920 were added after the armistice was signed to the original House bill, which made no provision beyond the taxable year 1919. The inserted Senate provision reads:

(b) For the taxable year 1919 and each taxable year thereafter there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the net income of every corporation a tax equal to the sum of the following:

FIRST BRACKET.

Twenty per centum of the amount of the net income in excess of the excess profits credit, (determined under Section 312,) and not in excess of 20 per centum of the invested capital.

SECOND BRACKET.

Forty per centum of the amount of the net income in excess of 20 per centum of the invested capital.

The provision also is made that "for the purposes of the act approved March 21, 1918, entitled 'An Act to Provide for the Operation of Transportation Systems While Under Federal Control, for the Just Compensation of Their Owners and for Other Purposes,' the tax imposed by this title shall be treated as levied by an act in amendment of Title II. of the Revenue act of 1917."

It is further provided that the tax to be paid in 1920 "shall in no case be more than 20 per centum of the amount of the net income in excess of $3,000 and not in excess of $20,000 plus 40 per centum of the amount of the net income in excess of $20,000." Nothing in this ruling, however, is to be construed in such manner as to increase the tax imposed under the schedule given.

Section 312 of the Revenue bill, which is quoted in the schedule proposed by the Senate for the taxable year 1920, provides "that the excess profits credit shall consist of a specific exemption of $3,000 plus an amount equal to 8 per centum of the invested capital for the taxable year." It further provides that a foreign corporation shall not be entitled to the specific exemption of $3,000.

It is probable that approximately $1,600,000,000 will be raised in the tax year 1919 under the Senate schedule adopted today.

The rates in the schedule for taxes payable in 1920 are one-third less than in the Senate proposal for the taxable year 1918, in which they are quoted as respectively 30 and 60 per centum, with the added condition that there shall be included in the taxation the sum, if any, by which 80 per centum of the amount of the net income in excess of the war profits credit exceeds the amount of the tax computed under the 30 and 60 per centum rate. The Senate had estimated that $2,400,000,000 would be raised in the taxable year 1918 by this schedule.

Under what is known as the 80 per cent. tax rate, with its alternative provisions, for the taxable year 1918, which was in the original House bill and has had the backing of Representative Kitchin and his followers, it was estimated that $3,200,000,000 would be raised.

The general protest of the amusement world against the proposal of the Senate conferees to increase the theatre admission tax to 20 per cent. of the cost of each ticket costing over 30 cents has extended to the theatrical labor unions. Secretary Wilson of the Department of Labor received today a telegram from the Theatrical Federation of San Francisco protesting against the proposed legislation to increase the tax on admission to theatres to 20 per cent. on tickets costing more than 30 cents. The men assert that the tax, if put into force, would have a serious effect on their employment.

INCOME TAX FORMS READY.

Mark Eisner Prepared for Passing of New Law by Congress.

Mark Eisner, collector of the Third Revenue District of New York, said yesterday that, when the new revenue bill becomes a law, he will have the proper return forms distributed throughout the district and that everybody will be informed when the sworn return must be filed. Meanwhile, Mr. Eisner says, there is no need of delaying the preparation of the figures. "Anything that Congress does now," said Mr. Eisner, "will not affect the amount of a person's earnings in 1918. Let us avoid the belated throwing together of figures that may hit or miss. Guesses cannot be accepted as the basis of taxation. It is clearly the duty of every person to compile correct figures and ascertain whether his income for 1918 was not sufficient to make a sworn return."

Mr. Eisner said that many inquiries had been received by him from business men asking for the method of computing the individual tax of partners, where the partnership has a fiscal year differing from the calendar year. The difficulty, he says, arises because the individual partners must file according to the calendar year, whereas the firm may keep its books on the fiscal year basis. He says that here is how a typical case would work out:

A. and B. are co-partners with a fiscal year ending Sept. 30, 1918. At that time they ascertain that the firm made a net profit of $32,000 after deducting the partnership excess-profits tax for the period beginning Oct. 1, 1917, and ending Dec. 31, 1917. (Partnerships were subject to excess-profits tax up to that date.)

Take the case of Partner A, whose share of the firm profits is $16,000 and whose income from other sources is $6,000.

Of the firm profits, since they were earned during the year beginning Oct. 1, 1917 and ending Sept. 30, 1918, one-quarter, or $4,000, will be taxed at the 1917 rates, and three-quarters, or $12,000, will be taxed at the 1918 rates.

1918 TAX.

Three-quarters of partnership profits =	$12,000
Other income =	6,000
Total	$18,000
Personal exemption	2,000
Income subject to normal tax	$16,000
Taxable at 6 per cent. of $4,000 =	$240 tax
Taxable at 12 per cent. of $12,000 =	1,440 tax
Total normal tax	$1,680
Surtax on income $18,000. (1918 rates) =	$550
Total tax 1918 income	$2,230 (1)

1917 CALCULATION.

Income for 1917—
One-fourth of partnership profits is	$4,000
Normal tax at 4 per cent. is	160

Surtax for 1917 will be based on total income for 1918 to start with. The total income for 1918 being $18,000, the rates to be applied to the $4,000 earned in 1917 will be, (1917 rates:)

Income in excess of $15,000 and not in excess of $20,000 =
$2,000 at 5 per cent.	= $100
Income in excess of $20,000 and not in excess of $40,000 =
$2,000 at 7 per cent.	= 140
Total surtax, 1917	$240
Total tax, 1917	400 (2)
Tax 1917 and 1918, (1) and (2)	$2,630

Lower Prices for Motor Trucks

One Government Act Tells the GMC War Story

One Official act of the United States Government tells in the simplest way the outstanding story of GMC trucks in war.

When the War Department sought to solve the problems growing out of too many models in motor transport, standardized truck sizes resulted.

Where no commercial model could be found to fit the exacting requirements, government specifications supplied the lack.

When it came to the ¾—1 ton truck there was a commercial chassis ready-built.

It was the GMC Model 16.

It had already been proved in ambulance service on the Mexican Border.

It had served the Allies ably in ambulance work before the United States entered the war, and was selected by the Medical Department in anticipation of the United States joining the Allies. Thousands were subsequently purchased for ambulance service.

Later in the war, when the Government decided to select a truck chassis to be adopted as Class "AA" for all military purposes, this GMC Model 16, strictly on its merits, in competitive tests, in the hands of Government officials, and subjected to the most exacting trials, made a perfect score, and it became the official Government standard—picked as it stood.

Because of the enormous Government demand our production on this model had reached the point at the close of the war which now enables us, by continuing full speed ahead, to offer the trade this same model at our pre-war price of $1,495, a reduction of $280.

This is the truck that made good in France, Belgium and Italy in the days of battle; and it will continue to make good in peaceful pursuits.

This history-making Model 16 is but one of six good trucks built in the GMC factory; every one of which has equally as good a record—even though less spectacular—in more than two hundred lines of business—prices reduced on all models.

WEST SIDE TENNIS CLUB WILL EXPAND

Forest Hills Organization Plans to Enlarge Clubhouse Before 1920 Season.

BID FOR BIG NET EVENTS

Will Seek National Championship and Other Title Events During Coming Season.

Plans for extensive improvements to the West Side Tennis Club at Forest Hills L. I., were presented to the officers of the organization at the annual meeting at Delmonico's, which ended early yesterday morning. The Building Committee, of which Theodore Hetzler, one of the Governors, is Chairman, is in charge of the work of expanding the club's present facilities. It is expected that by the time the season of 1920 comes around the club will have been expanded so that every accommodation will be provided to the ever-increasing number of members.

The plan of adding to the size and facilities of the club has been under consideration for a long time. The increased interest in tennis with each succeeding year, and the consistent additions to the Forest Hills organization's membership rolls have made it imperative for the club to make changes. The plans provide for the construction of two wings to the present building. When these wings are completed a complete rearrangement of the organization will be undertaken. This work will be concluded, it was stated yesterday by a prominent member of the club, in time for the season of 1920. The opinion at the meeting, which was attended by about fifty members, was that the war had given impetus to the sport.

William Alexander Campbell, Secretary, was delegated to represent the organization at the annual meeting of the United States National Lawn Tennis Association, to be held Feb. 7. He was instructed to apply for the national singles championship on behalf of the West Side Club, and for the other competitions which go with it. These latter include the veterans', father and son, boys', junior, and junior doubles title tournaments. There has been no indication what disposition of these fixtures will be made by the officials of the U. S. N. L. T. A., but there is every reason to believe that the West Side Club will be the scene of some of the year's biggest attractions.

A report read at the meeting disclosed that 167 of the Forest Hills Club's members had enlisted in the nation's military and naval service. Five members have made the supreme sacrifice, and gold stars to this number will be added to the organization's service flag. The deceased heroes are Lieutenant Gordon Boyd, Lieutenant E. Lansing Satterlee, Lieutenant Marshall G. Peabody, Lieutenant Percy M. Hall, and Lieutenant Nelson P. Kenyon.

The Treasurer's report for the year just ended showed an improved financial condition over that which was reported at the 1918 meeting. No exact figures were divulged, but it was admitted that the club's financial standing was better than a year ago. The Secretary's report showed an increase of more than fifty in the membership rolls.

All the officers were re-elected with but one exception. This case in the office of club captain. William J. Gallon was chosen for this office to succeed Major T. B. Barringer, who is attached to the army medical service. Mr. Gallon is an expert on the growth of grass. During his term as captain, he plans to experiment with the use of sheep in place of lawn mowers on the club's extensive grass acreage.

Charles Scott Landers was re-elected president; Marshall S. Hagar, vice-president, and William Alexander Campbell, secretary. The Board of Governors, to serve two years, was elected as follows: Theodore Hetzler, Clarence G. Heylmun, Waldo D. Hadsell and Stuart Johnston. The Nominating Committee for 1919 is composed of L. J. Carruthers, chairman; Charles W. MacMullen, Ernest W. Mecale, Hugh L. Nehring and Otis Smith.

NAVY KEEPS ON WINNING.

Annapolis Makes It 10 Straight by Defeating Swarthmore.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Jan. 18.—Though Swarthmore was expected to give the Midshipmen some trouble, the Navy basket ball team won its tenth straight victory this afternoon by defeating their visitors, 43 to 16. Swarthmore played well at the beginning of each half, but could not maintain the pace.

With Farwell and Deringer leading in the scoring, the Midshipmen played at a fast clip, and did some clever passing and shooting. Swarthmore resorted almost entirely to long shots, few of which scored. The Navy made a complete change in its team during the second period.

The lineup:

Naval Acad., (43.)	Position.	Swarthmore, (16.)
Farwell	L.F.	Place
Banner	R.F.	Carter
Beringer	C.	Stowe
Double	L.G.	Kemp
Watters	R.G.	Clancy

Field goals—Naval Academy: Farwell, (8,) Geringer, (5,) Watters, (2,) Bolton, (2,) Banner, Lewis. Swarthmore: Stowe, (2,) Kemp, (2,) Carter, Benjamin. Foul goals—Naval Academy: Farwell, 5 in 7; Thomas missed 1. Swarthmore: Stowe, 4 in 10. Referee—Mr. Benjamin, Illinois Normal. Times of halves—20 minutes.

LARNER COMING BACK.

American Ace Will Be Catcher at Columbia.

Columbia will have an American ace as catcher of its 'Varsity baseball team this Spring in the person of Lieutenant G. de Freest Larner, who, according to the official records announced by the War Department last week, has eight German planes to his credit. Before going to war Larner, as a freshman in the class of 1920, was an outfielder on the Columbia nine and he also showed rare skill as a catcher. He was a heavy hitter and a dependable player in every way.

With Larner back Columbia will have a powerful battery, in the opinion of Fred Dawson, coach of the team. Larner will have as a co-worker behind the bat, Johnny Ackerman, who was first-string catcher last season. Ackerman has returned to Morningside Heights after six months in the army.

For the pitching staff there is an apparent abundance of experienced material. Three veterans and one newcomer will be on hand. The three veterans are Tom Farrell and Edward Koenig of last year's nine, and John Hauck, who played on the 1915 and 1916 teams. Hauck was in the outfield because his heavy hitting was needed in the batting order. The new man is McHughey, from Missouri, who, it is said, has refused several offers from professional teams in the West, and was a star in interscholastic circles west of the Mississippi. With these four experienced pitchers to count on Dawson is sanguine over the prospects for the team. Farrell and Koenig were not stars last season, but they showed much improvement under Andy Coakley's skillful coaching, and are counted upon to take care of the bulk of the pitching should McHughey not live up to his reputation.

BASKET BALL FIVE RESIGNS.

Morningside Team's Action Makes Investigation Unnecessary.

Members of the Morningside A. C. who have been playing professional basket ball have severed their connection with the club, it became known yesterday. This will make unnecessary the proposed investigation of the Morningside A. C., which was to have been undertaken by the Metropolitan A. A. U. Registration Committee.

S. Belsky, Captain of the basket ball team, has sent in his registration card to the A. A. U., declaring his intention of playing as a professional. Belsky was a high jumper and held the position of Chairman of the Morningside A. C. Athletic Committee. This office will in future be occupied by Fred A. Niles, Jr., Chairman of the Metropolitan A. A. U. Registration Committee.

UP-STATE GUNNER SURPRISE AT TRAPS

Bristol of Chappaqua Lands Numerous Trophies at Travers Island Shoot.

Although many of the gunners of the New York Athletic Club are shooting at Pinehurst, there was a field of thirty-one nimrods on the firing line at the Travers Island traps of the organization yesterday. Among the number were several shooters from out of town, including J. I. D. Bristol of Chappaqua, N. Y. Aided by a handicap of 7 in 25, the up-State member had the satisfaction of scoring in every event.

Mr. Bristol began his good work by winning the Travers Island Trophy, the take-home cup of the day, on a shoot-off from several other gunners. He then scored legs on the Haslin Cup, the Club Cup, the Accumulation Cup, and the Red Cross Trophy. The Chappaqua gunner finished his afternoon's work by winning the high handicap prize, after several shoot-offs. All in all, it was quite some afternoon for the up-State shot.

George J. Corbett and O. C. Grinnell tied for the high scratch trophy. In the original shoot each had 95 out of a possible 100 targets. The shoot-off went to Mr. Grinnell. The winner also scored legs on both the Club and the Accumulation prizes. Mr. Corbett had to be satisfied with legs on the Haslin and the Accumulation Cups. A win on the last named cup also carries a leg on the Red Cross Trophy.

It was quite an afternoon for the winning of legs. In addition to the winners mentioned, B. O. Hedstrom, G. S. McCutcheon, F. J. Ham, A. P. Bennett, Dr. Culver, N. Webb, W. G. Allen, E. D. Anderson, W. Bauer, and J. C. Taylor all scored on the Haslin Cup. Additional legs on the Club Cup were won by W. B. Ogden, G. S. McCutcheon, J. H. Vanderveer, Z. Rogers, F. J. Ham, A. P. Bennett, N. Webb, W. G. Allen, W. Bauer, O. C. Seebass, and J. C. Taylor.

No less than eleven other gunners, in addition to the ones named, returned full scores of twenty-five targets in the double shoot for the Accumulation and Red Cross prizes. They were W. B. Ogden, B. O. Hedstrom, A. P. Bennett, N. Webb, W. G. Allen, W. C. Poertner, T. H. Lawrence, J. P. Donovan, F. B. Stephenson, E. D. Anderson, W. Bauer, and J. I. Brandenberg. A special at twenty-five targets was won by J. C. Taylor.

Columbia University's basket ball team overwhelmed the St. John's College of Brooklyn five last night in a one-sided game on the Blue and White court. The score was 48 to 15. Throughout the Columbia play was fast and aggressive, the passing was well calculated and the individual shooting was accurate. The St. John's aggregation, on the other hand, displayed a poor defense, ineffective passing and ragged shooting.

In the first half the Brooklynites made one field basket. Four more points came from free throws, so that the team had six points at the whistle against twenty-four for the Morningside Heights collegians. Farrell and Johnson were the leaders in the Columbia attack. Between them they accounted for thirty-two points. Another Language Makes Another Man!

This is the age of specialization—But the man who supplements his special training and education with a foreign language doubles his commercial value and opens up new possibilities and new fields of opportunity. Think of what the markets of South America alone offer to the man who can speak Spanish! Greater business, higher salary and position awaits the man who is capable.

You can learn a foreign language at home in comfort—in the privacy of your own room. The voice of the best native teachers will speak to you, correctly and distinctly, slowly or rapidly, as you prefer. It will talk to you during your spare moments or for hours at a time—whenever you are in the mood to listen—until you have mastered the correct accent and pronunciation.

You can acquire this great gift on your own phonograph with the disc records of the

LANGUAGE-PHONE METHOD and Rosenthal's Practical Linguistry

With this method foreign language study becomes a pleasant mental diversion. All the old-time drudgery of memorizing unnecessary rules, verbs, declensions, etc., is eliminated. You learn in the natural way—the way you learned your own tongue—hearing the living voice pronounce each word and phrase. Anyone can learn a foreign language who hears it spoken often enough, and by this method you can hear it as often as you desire. It is highly endorsed and recommended by leading Educators and Authorities. Send for Free Book, Dr. Richard S. Rosenthal's "Foreign Language Study," or call for demonstration.

ALMA GLUCK DELIGHTS.

She Sings to Great Audience, with Efrem Zimbalist at Piano.

Alma Gluck sang in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon, with Efrem Zimbalist, her violinist husband, at the piano, and a wee girl up in the boxes, making all the family present except Marie Virginia's new brother, born in November. There was a great audience to show the public delight at hearing again a prima donna of New York's own who has stepped to the front rank in a decade.

Louis Salter announced from the stage that Mme. Gluck had a cold, but wished to sing rather than disappoint her friends. Sing she did, with admirable humor, from Di Lasso's "Quand Mon Mari Vient de Dehors" through a score of songs to "Auld Daddy Darkness," by Sidney Homer. She gave charming old English airs, a Russian group including two of Rachmaninoff, new Italian and Spanish lyrics, bits by Ganz and Treharne, and "The Shepherdess" of the late Edward Horsman.

Ethel Leginska Plays for Benefit.

Ethel Leginska appeared yesterday afternoon at Aeolian Hall, playing, with more deference and less display than sensational pianists are wont to do, a program of four composers. There were Chopin and Liszt, of course, but it was not a day for tornadoes, and the Beethoven sonata, op. 53, was marked by artistic restraint. More than half the titles in a printed bill were from the American MacDowell, his New England idylls and sea pieces, the "Witches" and "Shadow" dances. The recital was a benefit for the Manassas Industrial School.

Frieda Tolin, Pianist, Makes Debut.

Frieda Tolin was a debutante in Aeolian Hall last evening. She is a young pianist from McKeesport, Penn., of evident ambition and taste, and her program put to proof both brain and fingers in its range from Beethoven's sonata, op. 27, No. 2, to Liszt's fantasy on "Rigoletto."

OPERA

By James Gibbons Huneker

"Crispino e La Comare."

"Crispino e la Comare," composed by the brothers Ricci in 1850, and for a long time a favorite operetta with Adelina Patti as the Anetta, was sung for the first time at the Metropolitan Opera House yesterday afternoon. It was to have been given Jan. 8 last, but the indisposition of Antonio Scotti relegated the production to this matinée. The cast was the following:

Crispino	Antonio Scotti
Annetta	Frieda Hempel
La Comare	Sophie Braslau
Fabrizio	Thomas Chalmers
Mirabolano	Andreas De Segurola
Contino del Fiore	Giordano Paltrinieri
Don Asdrubale	Paolo Ananian
Bortolo	Pietro Audisio

Mr. Papi conducted. The scenery depicting Venice in the seventeenth century was painted by Pieretto Biano. The stage was in charge of Richard Ordynzki, the chorus trained by Mr. Setti. The operetta was sung in Italian. The general performance was admirable. The success was marked.

The history of "The Cobbler and the Fairy"—they used to call Crispino the "sherry-cobbler" when Ronconi sung the part—is the history of its casts. The story by Piave is clever, though the mingling of the everyday and the supernatural is a wrench on our sense of dramatic fitness. The music is the music of Everyman, otherwise eclectic, otherwise not original. Rossini, Verdi, Bellini—those martial measures of the Cobbler in the second scene of Act I. are surely reminiscent of "Suona la tromba"—a little of every one, though not much of the Riccis, pleasant and animated as is the score. It sparkles like a false diamond in the setting of an artistic jeweler. Frieda Hempel deserves credit for resisting the temptation to sing "Sempre libera" in the second act. There was the supper, the guests, even a drinking song. In a twinkling Annetta could have transformed herself into Traviata if only Alfredo had appeared instead of the infuriated Crispino. And, no doubt, Mr. Siedle had difficulty with "Il Brindisi" which would obtrude its rollicking features when Mme. Hempel was singing her elaborate aria in Act I. But who cares? A musical comedy in the classical Italian style is "Crispino e la Comare," as full of fun as an egg is of meat (that is, a fleshly egg). Also crammed with coloratura.

An unknown correspondent informs us that the first New York performance took place at the Academy of Music Oct. 24, 1865, Max Maretzek conducting. Clara Louise Kellogg was Annetta and Rovere Crispino. A fire at the house caused the operetta to be transferred for a brief period to the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, (Oct. 10, 1866.) Again Kellogg sang, but with the great buffo, Giorgio Ronconi. As was told in THE TIMES last Sunday, Adelina Patti sang the part with sovereign success some fifteen years after the original production. English companies in the 70's and 80's put the pretty piece in their repertory. Luisa Tetrazzini was the Annetta at the Manhattan Opera House. We have heard Patti several times and Tetrazzini once. We like Frieda Hempel best, after Adelina the peerless. Her touch is lighter than Tetrazzini's; she is more slender, more piquant, more comedienne. Yesterday she was charming, her singing birdlike. "The Carnival of Venice," with more or less hellish variations, captured her hearers because of the vocal pyrotechnics; but we best liked those few bars, so purely lyric and legato, in the vision scene. Her scena in Act I., second scene, was brilliant, also brilliantly sharp on the final top note. Mme. Hempel received an ovation. A splendid artist she is.

As for Scotti, his comedy and singing—he was in excellent voice—there is only one word. Can't you guess it? He was delightful. He had the true vis comica and was tactful, appealing, humorous, Crispino to the life. He, too, received a rousing recognition. He is the last of a great artistic line of which Victor Maurel is king. Segurola was funny as the apothecary. Chalmers effective, and Sophie Braslau as the fairy was sufficiently impressive as an Italian Erda-Kundry, bobbing up from holes in the ground. Her voice, too, was impressively dark and sonorous.

"Prophete" for French Hospital.

Meyerbeer's "Le Prophète" was repeated at the Metropolitan last night in the annual benefit for the French Hospital. Signor Caruso headed a familiar cast, while for the first time Mme. Matzenauer reappeared as Fides. There was a large attendance, including many of the representatives of France in America during the war.

$8,500,000 GAIN IN GOLD RESERVES

Federal Banks Also Report Continued Return of the Outstanding Notes.

LESS WAR PAPER ON HAND

This Follows Redemption of the Balance of the September Issue of Treasury Certificates.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—Continued return movement to the reserve banks of outstanding Federal Reserve notes together with liquidation of earning assets is indicated in the Federal Reserve Board's weekly bank statement, issued as at the close of business on Jan. 17, 1919. A further gain of $8,500,000 is indicated in the banks' aggregate gold reserves.

Total holdings of war paper decreased $138,100,000, following the redemption on Jan. 16 of the balance of the Sept. 17 issue of Treasury certificates, while other discounts on hand show a decline of $18,800,000. Acceptances on hand purchased in the open market fell off $4,000,000, Chicago and San Francisco reporting considerable liquidation of this class of paper.

An increase of $95,400,000 in United States short-term securities represents largely temporary Treasury certificates taken by the New York Reserve Bank to cover advances to the Government pending the collection of funds from depositary institutions. Total earning assets, $2,174,500,000, show a decrease of $66,100,000.

Government deposits increased $12,100,000, while member bank deposits show a gain of $54,500,000. Net deposits, because of the larger float reported this week, show an increase of but $16,500,000.

Exchange of reserve notes for gold accounts for the increase of $8,500,000 in the gold reserves noted. Shifting of reserves away from Boston, New York, and Richmond to Chicago, and other Western banks, is noted. The banks' reserve percentage, because of the gain in reserves and the considerable reduction in Federal Reserve note circulation shows a rise from 51.8 to 52.8 per cent.

Federal Reserve agents report a decrease of $74,200,000 in the total Federal Reserve notes outstanding. The banks report a total Federal Reserve note circulation of $2,513,000,000, a reduction of $77,700,000 for the week. All the banks show smaller circulation figures than the week before. For the last three weeks there has been a decrease in Federal Reserve note circulation of $172,500,000, or at the rate of $37,400,000 a week. Aggregate liabilities of the banks on Federal Reserve bank notes in circulation increased $1,500,000, and are at present about $125,000,000.

Withdrawals from the system of the Marine National of Buffalo and of the First National of Syracuse account for the substantial decrease in paid-in capital shown for the New York system as a whole.

HOLD FEWER U. S. BONDS.

Member Banks Also Report Decrease in Loans Secured by War Obligations.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—Some decrease in the holdings of United States War Bonds, also in loans secured by United States war obligations are indicated in the board's weekly statement showing the condition on Jan. 10, of 764 member banks in leading cities.

Treasury certificates holdings show an increase of $32,100,000, of which $20,100,000 represents the increase at the banks in the twelve Federal Reserve cities. Total United States bonds other than circulation bonds, on hand declined $23,700,000, smaller figures being shown for all groups of banks. Aggregate loans secured by United States war obligations fell off $52,100,000, largely at the banks in the Federal Reserve cities.

United States war obligations and loans secured by such obligations aggregate $3,261,500,000 and constitute 23.9 per cent. of the total loans and investments of all reporting banks, as against 24.2 per cent. the week before. For the banks in the Federal Reserve Bank cities a decline in this ratio from 25.7 to 25.4 per cent. is noted.

Government deposits show an increase of about $67,000,000 for all reporting banks and of $35,300,000 for the banks in the twelve Federal Reserve Bank cities. Other net demand deposits fell off $101,800,000, the New York City banks alone reporting a decline of $81,000,000 under this head. Time deposits went up $10,500,000. Reserve balances with the Federal Reserve Banks increased $1,100,000, while cash in vault shows a decrease of $14,600,000.

For the banks in the twelve Federal Reserve Bank cities the ratio of net deposits to investments shows a rise from 84.3 to 84.6 per cent. For the New York City banks, because of the relatively larger decrease in net deposits, a decline of this ratio from 89.5 to 88.7 per cent. is noted. The ratio of combined reserve balances and cash to net deposits of the banks in the twelve Federal Reserve cities shows a slight decline from 15.9 to 15.8 per cent. For the New York City banks this ratio shows an increase from 16.4 to 16.5 per cent.

Excess reserves of the banks in the twelve Federal Reserve districts work out at $80,800,000, as against $75,400,000 the week before. For the New York City banks an increase of this item from $65,400,000 to $66,600,000 is noted.

BOSTON COPPER GOSSIP.

Mines Beginning to Curtail Output —Workers on Part Time.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 18.—When December reports of copper production are all in it will be found that the companies in the United States have curtailed 40 per cent. General Manager McNaughton of the Calumet and Hecla mines is quoted as saying that since April, 1917, eighteen mining companies in his district have ceased development work and that the close of 1918 finds search for profitable lodes of importance being made by the Seneca and the Mayflower Old Colony.

The December output of Calumet and Hecla, including subsidiaries, 11,300,066 pounds, was 700,000 pounds greater than in November. The company announces curtailment beginning next Monday. All employees will be put on a three-quarter time basis. Approximately 11,000 men are affected.

Chile Copper in December turned out 10,002,000 pounds of copper against 9,854,000 pounds in November. North Butte produced 400,000 more pounds of copper in December than in the preceding month.

Output of the Mason Valley Company in December was 1,273,176 pounds compared with 1,073,400 pounds in November.

Magma Copper production in December was 1,049,783 pounds against 992,271 pounds in November.

The output of Mohawk Wolverine in December was 151,581 pounds for the former and 608,087 pounds for the latter. These figures compare with 950,855 pounds for Mohawk and 370,332 pounds for Wolverine in the preceding month.

Under its policy of curtailment Inspiration Consolidated probably will turn out 7,000,000 pounds monthly. At full blast it could produce between 11,000,000 and 12,000,000 pounds a month.

Quincy's output in 1918 was about 20,000,000 pounds of copper, costing above 17½ cents a pound.

CANADA'S TRADE DOUBLES.

Dominion's World Commerce Totals $2,548,691,000 for Year.

The foreign trade of Canada for the year ending March 31, 1918, amounted to $2,548,691,000, compared with $1,129,610,000, which was reported for the year ending March 31, 1914. This increase was called to the attention of the stockholders of The Canadian Bank of Commerce by Sir Edmund Walker, the President, at the annual meeting held in Montreal, as an evidence of the prosperity which the Dominion was enjoying. The excess of exports was placed at $623,647,000. The value of the field crops of Canada for 1918, the last month of the year being estimated, he said, was $1,383,000,000, an increase of $238,000,000 over the figures of 1917.

In discussing industrial conditions in the Dominion further, he said:

Such a surplus of exports over imports as $623,000,000 would, if we were paid in international money, make us financially rich beyond imagination and it would put New York exchange, the real test of our international position, at a discount. As a matter of fact New York exchange has lately been at a high premium, because with all our exports we cannot command enough international money to keep the balance even. At the moment, because of transportation difficulties, we are carrying a very large amount of wheat sold to the British Government. If in settlement we received even a moderate payment in cash we could keep the rate for New York exchange fairly low, but there is no assurance that any part of what is due will be paid in money useful for international settlements.

We have pointed out before the extent to which we make purchases from the United States which must be settled in cash and for which, directly or indirectly, we receive from Great Britain only long-term obligations. This year conditions are not improved, despite large orders for munitions given by the United States to Canada. Comparing the year ending 31st March, 1918, with the previous one, we imported from the United States goods to the value of $792,000,000, as against $678,000,000, and we exported to them $418,000,000, as against $290,000,000, so that we owed them on balance $374,000,000 instead of $388,000,000. During the six months ending September, 1918, matters did not improve; the scale of imports and exports was larger, but the resulting difference against us was proportionately about the same.

The production from Canadian mines was estimated at $220,000,000, compared with $189,646,000 in 1917.

Want Embargo on Cotton Exports Lifted.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—Members of Congress from cotton growing States sent a cablegram to President Wilson today, urging that all embargoes against cotton exports to non-enemy countries be lifted at once, and that shipments to Germany and Austria be permitted as soon as possible.

INVOKE GREGORY ON HOGS.

Members of the New York Produce Exchange have sent a petition to the Attorney General of the United States asking him to take such action as will be necessary to prevent any further price fixing on hogs.

The petition reads as follows:

Thomas W. Gregory, Attorney General, Washington, D. C.:

As members of the New York Produce Exchange, vitally interested in handling the products of agriculture, we petition your honorable self to take such action as will prevent any further arbitrary price fixing of hogs, and consequently of hog products, by a so-called Hog Price Fixing Committee, which, as far as we can learn, is acting without any legal status.

Price fixing by this committee has been in operation for several months. As a war measure, we would have nothing to say, but would loyally support any action of the Government for increasing the supply of food. It is now no longer a war measure, and such arbitrary action should be stopped. Everett C. Brown, Chairman of the Hog Price Fixing Committee, has openly stated that, were it not for the activities of his committee, hogs would now be selling at from 10 to 12 cents per pound, instead of 17½ cents per pound, the price arbitrarily fixed by his committee.

What end in view the committee has in holding the price of hogs, and consequently the price of hog products, at from 5 to 7 cents per pound above the normal price, based on supply and demand, we do not know, but we do know that the arbitrary action of this committee is placing a heavy burden on the long-suffering consumers, who comprise about 70 per cent. of the population of the country in comparison with about 30 per cent. of the farmer population, and that it is now causing discontent among the people, which is now openly and bitterly expressed.

As a war measure, well and good, but in peace the old law of supply and demand can fix prices better than any Government bureau, whose usefulness is now at an end, and whose activities, if they cannot be entirely suppressed should be held down to the strict letter of the law.

BRITAIN'S FUEL PROBLEM.

Coal Output Reduced 185,000,000 Tons During the War.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—The British Government's fuel problem as presented by the war is set forth in a memorandum supplemental to the general report made by the commission sent abroad by Harry A. Garfield, the Federal Fuel Administrator.

In the first year of the war 191,170 British miners enlisted in the army, and in June, 1918, the total had risen to 285,000. On the latter date the net loss of mine labor had been reduced to 133,000 men through extraordinary efforts to return soldiers to the mines, but this program was interrupted early in 1918 by the necessity of returning 75,000 miners to the battle lines.

Where the United States was able to increase its coal production, Great Britain suffered a loss of approximately 185,000,000 tons mined, using the 1913 production figures as a basis for computation.

Curtis Japanese Art Yields $9,341.

At the closing afternoon of the Thomas E. H. Curtis sale of Japanese art objects at the Anderson Galleries yesterday returns were $3,604, making a grand total of $9,341. A beautiful soft paste vase with a design of dragons and ho-he birds amidst clouds and fire emblems, from the Thomas E. Waggaman collection, went to A. Serell for $320. A tall earthenware vase of the Han period went to Oshima for $132; a peachbloom writer's water vessel to S. Chait for $330; Oshima paid $100 for another Waggaman vase, K'ang-hsi, white porcelain with copper red dragons, and the Park Avenue Studios gave $315 for a pair of jade vases with covers decorated with phoenixes and flowering shrubs in relief.

For Essex County Inquiry.

J. Henry Bacheller, President of the Ironbound Trust Company of Newark, N. J., and former Prosecutor Joseph L. Newman will investigate the financial affairs of Essex County. The appointments were made yesterday by Chief Justice Gummere on the application of twenty-five property owners, mostly members of the Federation of Improvement Associations. The investigation is to determine how the Freeholders of Essex County acted and spent money on various contracts on the Overbrook Hospital and other county institutions, and how they conducted the county's business generally. A bond of $7,500 each was required from the appointees.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COLMAR-BERG, Luxemburg, Jan. 15.—On the western outskirts of this play-town of a toy nation there is a big arched stone gateway. On each side of that gateway and conveniently around stand American doughboys. They are of the 33d Division, and the platoon is under the command of Sergeant Dorrance Nelson, who hails from Galesburg, Ill.

The road through that gateway winds majestically up a hill, the pastoral beauty of which matches the rest of this big park, which they call a duchy, and atop the hill stands a great chateau. It is Colmar-Berg.

There they made a new Duchess five minutes ago. She is Charlotte, sister Duchess Adelaide, who hoped that the Germans would win the war.

Now the story of how Charlotte came to be Duchess of Luxemburg is what I call a good story. Not that it is such a pretty story, but then who said that all interesting stories were pretty stories?

One has heard often in America of how significant political bargains were made in back rooms. Charlotte's story is of course, nothing like that. But they call it Charlotte's story, for Charlotte is just a girl of 22 who has taken Adelaide's place because her mother told her to do so, and somebody else told her mother to tell Charlotte to be Duchess.

Played Political Seesaw.

If this sounds like an incoherent story, then it sounds right. That is the story of Luxemburg's politics for you. It is kaleidoscopic and every one will tell you something different about it as I have found out in the two days I have been trying to discover why Luxemburg has been playing seesaw between a royal and a republican form of government for the last ten days.

Meanwhile, there is a strict censorship on telegrams and letters out of the duchy.

No one who would talk knew just what was what, and those who know maybe they are not to be found in Luxemburg, anyhow. But what I do know of Luxemburg's story seems to recall the fantastic history-making of a century and more ago.

After hearing so much in these latter days of a League of Nations and a brotherhood of man and that sort of thing, to one who has seen something of practical politics it came almost as a refreshing breeze to see adjustments made by those in a position to make them as it was thought they should be made for the welfare of the largest interests involved—I say involved advisedly, for that is a good word to apply to the Luxemburg situation at this time.

A Study in Self-Determination.

Suffice it to say at this point that Luxemburg's affairs have been advanced in the good, old-fashioned way. And while the "self-determination" of this small people has been going on there have been camping on their soil soldiers of two great powers in the presence of whom the little duchy has been like a lamb. To use American slang, which perhaps better fits the situation, the little duchy has been more like another animal—one that we sometimes accuse of eating tin cans.

If you please, let's take a general look at the situation. Quartered both in the north and south of the duchy are American troops, part of the Second American Army, which stands in support of the Third Army, which is the Army of Occupation. In the City of Luxemburg itself is the headquarters of Marshal Foch, the allied Commander in Chief, which has a certain number of French troops attached to it. Throughout its length and breadth the Luxemburg duchy is in close touch with warriors who fought and won the battle for world, national, and personal liberty.

Look a little closer, in a bird's-eye view of the little duchy, and you will see that in the city French troops are maintaining law and order, and maintaining it completely and absolutely. The police guard the public buildings, including the Chamber of Deputies; patrol the streets well and often, and occupy a position which safely prevents all disorders, revolutionary or otherwise. In Marshal Foch's headquarters city today in this little neutral nation there is no chance for disturbances.

Royal Sisters Still Together.

Look yet a little to the north, some ten miles, and there, as I have said, you will find the Duchess's castle well guarded by American doughboys, while in the castle are the new Duchess and the former Duchess and their four sisters, not leaving out of account the mother. You may look closer and try to find the Sergeant Major who started the ill-fated revolution, but you probably won't find him. I couldn't, and others who are looking for him can't.

It is a hard job to explain the Luxemburg situation briefly. It reflects world politics and the interests of many nations. It reflects religion in many aspects. It reflects the old fight over the separation of Church and State. It reflects the shadows of the recent world war.

Every one knows that Luxemburg was used by the Germans in 1914 as a passageway to France. One who blames Luxemburg for not placing her army of 300 in the path of the Huns might add that the duchy furnished 3,000 volunteers to the army of France.

Every one knows that Duchess Adelaide entertained the Kaiser and sent him one telegram praying God for the success of the German cause. One knows as well that the Duchess's pro-German attitude displeased a large part of her 300,000 subjects.

For some time there has been in the duchy a Clerical Party supporting the Duchess's Government, which was very good to the Catholic Church, and there have been anti-Clericals who opposed the Duchess's Government. The anti-Clericals were divided among those who wished to join France, those who wished to join Belgium, and those who wished an independent republic—all wishing to rid themselves of the Duchess.

Alweiss Dominant Figure.

When the Allies won the war and American troops entered Luxemburg, they found that the sentiment against the Duchess's pro-German attitude had grown bitter, and that perhaps a majority of the population wished to put her out. But it so happened that the Clericals supporting the Duchess still controlled Parliament, and Alweiss, President of the Chamber and Prime Minister, was the dominant factor in the duchy's governmental policies.

The anti-Duchess feeling was running so high that all plans were laid for a revolution on the occasion of General Pershing's entrance, the revolutionists counting on the American General to aid them, but our Commander in Chief didn't see it in that way. When he stood on the balcony and reviewed with the Duchess the passing American troops, no revolution took place.

Then we moved on our way and Marshal Foch with French troops took over the city. At first the French troops remained aloof from Luxemburg's affairs, and the Clericals and Radicals went at each other undisturbed, and the halls of Parliament echoed and re-echoed with accusations and counteraccusations.

Then on Jan. 1 a motion was adopted calling for a formal investigation of the Government's attitude during the war. On Jan. 9 there took place a heated debate in which the galleries hooted down the Clericals defending Duchess Adelaide, whereupon President Alweiss led his party out of the Chamber.

The anti-Duchess faction, then being in the majority, passed a resolution calling for the abdication of the Duchess. But while this was being done word of what happened had reached the army of 282 in Caserne. A week before the army had discharged all its old officers and elected Sergeant Major Eiffers Chairman of the army.

Proclaimed a Republic.

Hearing what had taken place in the Chamber, Eiffers and his soldiers at once proclaimed a republic, and, marching to the Chamber, asked Parliament to form a new Government. This was done, and at 6:30 o'clock on Jan. 9 the appointment of a Committee of Safety to conduct the Government was announced.

The next day every one in Luxemburg supposed that there was a republic. On the 11th the Havas semi-official news agency sent out a dispatch from Metz to the effect that a republic had been proclaimed in Luxemburg and that Duchess Adelaide had abdicated and gone into seclusion in her castle at Colmar.

And so the Duchess had abdicated, her abdication having been handed to her Prime Minister, but not having been presented to Parliament.

In the meanwhile Alweiss had "got busy." He had called on General Latour, commander of the French garrison, and, placing his case before the General, had asked him to preserve order. He told the General that there was danger of disorder, and, issuing an order for the disbandment of the Luxemburg army, had General Latour agree to it, and it was done.

The local police being part of the army, Alweiss asked General Latour to police the city and guard public buildings. The General agreed. I can state that General Latour's expressed attitude is that the Government of France, not having recognized the new republic, he had to deal with the only Government he knew officially to exist.

Of course the Luxemburg anti-Duchess faction construed the French action to be against the revolution, and got angry about it, and is still angry for that matter.

Scored a Coup in Parliament.

With the French military authorities refusing to recognize the Committee of Safety which was a revolutionary Government, Alweiss had the better of the situation. On the 14th, which was yesterday, he got his army together, and when Parliament met, with French soldiers on guard in case of disorder, of course Alweiss presented in a dignified manner the abdication of Grand Duchess Marie Adelaide. To say that it was accepted puts the matter succinctly.

Then lo! and behold, Alweiss's lieutenants proposed that the crown be bestowed on Charlotte, sister of Adelaide. Having the votes, Alweiss put through this motion and appointed a committee to wait on Charlotte today and have her sign the Constitution.

The news spread like wild fire throughout the city and, needless to say, there was excitement. But there were sturdy French troops everywhere, and, of course, there was no disturbance and no organization of revolutionary mobs to get even with Alweiss.

This afternoon at 4 o'clock two automobiles bearing members of Parliament reached Colmarberg to "make" the new Duchess. They were stopped at the gate by the American guards, who refused entrance to them until the Duchess said it was all right. Then they went up the hill and Charlotte signed for her new place.

Shortly after the Alweiss coup in the Chamber, there reached Colmar word that a revolutionary crowd—Bolsheviki was the way it was put—was on its way to the castle, and thereupon an extra heavy American guard was put on patrol. It marched about the castle for five hours, when, at Adelaide's request, it was taken away, but there were always enough Americans about to see that no one stole the Duchess intrusted to their care.

In passing let me say that those doughboys took good care of the Duchess and like her family personally. This liking was not diminished when three of the sisters came down to the gate yesterday with two bicycles each and asked Sergeant Nelson to give them three soldiers to go riding with. They got the soldiers.

But to return to Luxemburg politics. I have been in the capital most of the day, and when I say that those of the population who are for a republic do not understand events, I say just what they tell me. They say that they thought all the Allies were for a republic, and cannot understand why the allied soldiers sat on their republic—that's just the way they put it. Those who like the Duchesses say that the French did just right in "maintaining law and order."

For a sidelight on the situation let us recall that during the German occupation of Luxemburg the rate of exchange was 5 francs for 4 marks. When the Germans got out, the Ducal Government gave the word that all who lived in Luxemburg prior to August, 1914, should put their marks in the banks, and they would be credited with 5 francs for 4 marks. This rate was maintained through December, while everywhere else in the world the rate was 3 francs for 4 marks. The rate was maintained until Jan. 1.

Now, I don't know what has been promised and what has not, but any business man in Luxemburg will tell you that the Allies are going to force Germany to make good the difference. In other words, supply enough extra marks to guarantee the people of Luxemburg against financial loss.

As Luxemburg waxed very rich during the war, this is an important item in the life of the people who own the many marks with which their banks are crammed.

Before the war Luxemburg had trade relations of a pleasant and profitable nature with Germany. By these relations her iron and steel industry flourished as they had never flourished before. Now Luxemburg wants new arrangements.

There are those who favor annexation to France, the leaders of this faction being Frenchmen who live in the duchy and some of the clericals. There are those who want a political union with Belgium, and this faction is not weak. There are those who want an independent republic, and there are those who want to retain the Duchess. Those who want to retain the Duchess are divided between a trade union with France and a trade union with Belgium.

It takes little imagination to see that no issue is very clear in Luxemburg politics. If Luxemburg becomes a part of France it must be a republic, for a republic cannot take in a monarchy. If what they say about France "sitting" on their republic is true, and if what they heard about France being willing to welcome Luxemburg into her fold is true, why—and so on. What is the answer? I can't find it.

Anyhow, I am willing to go on record as saying that the French General is doing well in the way of maintaining order in Luxemburg. It is reported that back in 1916 the then Premier of France promised the King of the Belgians that if at the end of the war Luxemburg by any chance wanted to join Belgium, France would not stand in the way.

However that may be, the revolution seems off, and here in Luxemburg they have a brand-new Duchess. How long she will last I don't know, and I am inclined to believe that she shares with me that lack of assurance. But let us say for her that no one has yet proved that she sent any telegrams to the Kaiser and that she is more popular than Adelaide.

Maybe Adelaide in the privacy of her family says, "Just wait." At the capital many say that the real ruler of Luxemburg was a priest with whom Adelaide spent seven hours daily in prayer. Charlotte is much of a modern girl, and has a tutor who teaches her English three hours a day. She likes Americans, she says. Truly she has Adelaide's mistakes to profit by.

And now, while the Allies continue their policy of noninterference, adhering to the Wilson policy of self-determination of small peoples, Duchess Charlotte announces that she is going to town tomorrow to look over her new work.

When the Germans first invaded Luxemburg at the beginning of the war, the Grand Duchess who recently abdicated was represented as having been strongly opposed to the invaders and shown her feeling in action, though fruitless. Recent reports indicated that she had at least changed her views to acquiescence in the continued occupation of her country. Some statements have been made that she had became a partisan of the Germans.

It will be noticed in this schedule No. XXXVIII. refers to Alsace-Lorraine. According to the terms of the armistice of Nov. 11, and the two renewals on Dec. 14, there is nothing to prevent elections taking place there except the preponderating French sentiment and the belief on account of the ultimate destiny of the territory that such elections would be useless. Of course the expanded territory, including the German portions of Austria and Bohemia, will not hold elections, as whether the question they are to be incorporated into the new Germany will depend upon the act of the Constituent Assembly which is elected today.

39,000,000 TO VOTE IN GERMANY TODAY

Many Parties, Some of Them Old Ones in New Guise, Are Competing.

38 DISTRICTS IN ALL

Conservative Elements and Majority Socialists Seem Likely to Win Most Delegates.

Today some 21,000,000 women and 18,000,000 men out of a population of upward of 64,711,982 will elect the 433 delegates who are to meet on Feb 10 to adopt a Constitution for new Germany.

According to the latest cabled reports, the efforts of the Spartacus element to prevent the holding of the election for the National Constituent Assembly have been in vain and the German people, with a handful still demanding the right to rule in the name of the proletariat, will decide the form of the Government.

It is likely, that today's election will be held under the rules laid down by the Ebert Provisional Government and announced on Nov. 30. The date of the election was fixed on Dec. 19, when some 400 of the delegates to a general meeting of Workers' and Soldiers' Councils from all parts of Germany voted for Jan. 19 and only about seventy delegates opposed it.

The former empire has been divided into thirty-eight election districts, each entitled to six to sixteen delegates, according to the census figures of 1910. Each delegate is to represent about 150,000 persons. The election is to be held according to the system of proportional representation, thus insuring a voice in the National Assembly to all but insignificant minorities. All German men and women who have completed their twentieth year by election day are entitled to vote, directly and in secret. Candidates must be electors who have been citizens for at least one year. Persons under guardianship and those who have lost their civic rights cannot vote, but bankruptcy and the receipt of public charity no longer involve loss of the suffrage.

Of the parties taking part in the election, the German Social Democratic Party (the Majority Socialists forming the backbone of the Ebert Government) is the only one to enter the contest under its pre-war name.

The old Clerical Party (the Centre) has become the Christian-Democratic People's Party, and is pleading for, and to some extent receiving, the support of the Protestant clergy and laymen, who are opposed to what they term the anti-Christian activities of the Social Democrats, and are taking advantage of the good organization of their Catholic fellow-citizens to express this opposition.

The former Conservative parties, in which such Junkers and Pan-Germans as Count zu Reventlow and Count von Westarp, played leading rôles, have formed a combination known as the German-National People's Party in which the Christian Socialists (largely anti-Semites) form a factor.

Under the name of German Democratic Party are united the Left Wing and Centre of the old Progressive People's Party, the Left Wing of the National Liberals and many independent Democrats. At a meeting held in Berlin in early December by the leaders of the German People's Party, a combination of the Right Wing of the Progressive People's Party and the Centre and Right Wing of the National Liberal (big business) Party, it was decided to fuse with the German Democratic Party, but this decision aroused so much opposition, from both reactionary and progressive elements in both new parties, that it is probable that in many districts today the German People's Party will have its own candidates. The Democratic Party stands for a liberal German republic and with the Christian Democratic People's Party is expected to make the best showing against the Social Democrats.

The Independent Social Democratic Party, direct descendant of the political group headed by Haase, Bernstein, Kautsky, and other prominent Socialists in March, 1916, following the split in the old Socialist Reichstag group over the question of continuing to vote for war credits, has candidates in the field in a number of districts, but, judging from the results already shown in several local contests, is not likely to elect many delegates.

The election districts are as follows:

Election Districts.	Population.	Dele-gates.
1—East Prussia	2,064,175	14
2—West Prussia	1,703,474	11
3—City of Berlin.....	2,071,257	14

WHY U. S. LOWERED ITS SHIPPING RATES

Redfield Says It Had to be Done with Vessels in Its Control to Meet Competition.

MUST ACCEPT WAR LOSSES

Tells at Republican Club Meeting How Unpreparedness Before War Was Overcome.

BOYCOTT ON GERMAN SHIPS

British Seamen's Union Leader Explains How They Will Retaliate for Piratical Acts.

At the Nonpartisan Saturday Discussion held yesterday afternoon in the Republican Club, 54 West Fortieth Street, William C. Redfield, Secretary of Commerce, explained to the audience the bases of the decision of the Government to reduce the shipping rates on Government controlled ships and the reason for the continuation of the cable censorship.

He later revealed some of the details of unpreparedness which we faced at the beginning of the war, the measures which were taken to overcome them, and steps which have been taken to prevent the country again finding itself in a state of industrial impotency. He finally declared that America must send her commerce out over the seas as a servant of the nations and not as an exploiter of the world.

The labor problem in peace and reconstruction was expounded from the point of view of capital by Henry Y. Braddon, Commissioner from Australia, who claimed the honor of conducting the fight against every strike in Australia in the last twenty years, and from the labor point of view by Captain Edward Tupper, organizer of the British Seamen's Union, who in his turn boasted of having led every strike in Great Britain in the same time. J. Van Vechten Olcott presided.

Government Must Take Losses.

With reference to the problem of shipping rates, Secretary Redfield made it clear that the Government felt it could not base the necessary earnings of its ships upon their war cost, for in that case business would be hopelessly handicapped by competition carried on at one-third the cost, and that therefore the Government had concluded it must take its losses along with the business men, a concession which would mean a reduction in the value of the ships amounting to $1,000,000,000.

He then showed how the United States was not alone responsible for the censorship placed upon the cables, but was bound by agreement with France, Great Britain, and Italy to the terms of the armistice. He said he had cabled Secretary Lansing last week that he thought the continuance of such censorship was injurious to business, that it served no practical purpose, and that he advocated its being speedily lifted.

"What we did at the outbreak of the war," continued Mr. Redfield, "to overcome such handicaps as are little thought of as part of the preparedness program, and which can only be spoken of now, are in some senses amazing. For instance, when the German ships which were thought to be irreparably damaged were once out on the high seas, manned by our sailors, they made a higher speed than they had ever attained before.

"As an example of the devilishness of the German engineers, let me cite the trick they played of inserting brass discs in tubes and then removing by acid baths any trace of their location. Mechanics had to tap thousands of feet of tubing with a light hammer in order to find them. From the steam cylinders V-shaped sections were broken out in the belief that they could not be repaired, and it was a fact that there were only two or three foundries in the country that could replace the castings. However, an ingenious mechanic thought he could weld a stripe to the outside and fuse a new section into the broken space. This had never been done before, but it was done then, and the old cylinders did the work.

"Just as important as the lack of the more obvious military equipment such as guns and powder, were such deficiencies as these. We could not produce the linen that was absolutely essential for the wings of airplanes; the varnish for the wings contained nitrates, and we did not have them; there wasn't a lens in nautical instrument that hadn't been made in Jena; and we did not have a map of the coast of this country from Brownsville, Texas, to Hampton Roads, Va.

How Difficulties Were Overcome.

"We overcame those difficulties. By the use of an Egyptian cotton grown in the Imperial Valley of California and a Sea Island cotton we manufactured an unusually strong yarn and fabricated a cloth fully as strong as linen. We made an acetate to take the place of a nitrate, and then designed a factory to manufacture that. We now own factories at Pittsburgh and Washington that turn out a glass equal to the best that has ever come out of Jena, and we have the map that was absolutely essential to the Artillery Corps were it successfully to defend the coast from invasion.

"We desire to get rid of all the restrictions which the war has made it necessary for the Government to place upon business, but as them myself the Government must become the servant of the people, not their master. However, we have lacked what the Germans have had all along. Their science has been the guide in stimulating industrial output. When the manufacturers of the United States and Great Britain proved themselves unable to interest a certain Central American tribe in its fabrics the Germans tried. They called in an ethnologist—an ethnotogist, of all men! He told them that certain symbols and colors were signs of good luck among those people. The Germans took the cue and sold their goods. You wouldn't send books with orange covers to Galway or fabrics with Christian symbols to Asiatic Turkey.

"To do this very thing with which the Germans have been so successful we have built the greatest laboratory in the world at the cost of $1,150,000, and we have put in units of all the great industries, not manufacturing units, but units that will manufacture. So we have begun to do the thing that Germany did thirty-five years ago.

"Up to four months ago we were using the same glass pots that were in use in the time of Rameses, but now from the brain of a master of ceramics has come apparatus that will do in one-half hour what formerly took a month, and will do it for $6 when it formerly cost $54. We have units for the manufacture of cotton, woolen, paper, rubber, cement, stone, iron, steel, and many others, to which any manufacturer may send his men without cost to work there, to experiment, and to put American industry in the place where it belongs."

Compulsory Arbitration a Failure.

Mr. Braddon traced the history of labor in Australia from 1890 to the present, and said that, of the two main policies which had been adopted there, compulsory arbitration had been a failure and would soon be discarded, but that the basic living wage had come to stay, and would make it possible for capital and labor to discuss their problems amicably and to come to terms satisfactory to both.

In arguing against compulsory arbitration, the speaker pointed out that since the decision in any dispute was always left to a court, the employer threw off responsibility in the matter and left it to the court. Then again, he showed that while the employer was always compelled to obey the awards of the court, the employes, existing in great numbers, only obeyed them when it suited.

"While the policy of compulsory arbitration does not have its roots fixed in righteousness," he said, "and therefore cannot live, the fixed wage will live because it is only justice that a man shall not always live next door to poverty."

Introducing himself as the man who had always led the strikes of the workingmen in England, Captain Tupper declared, in refutation of Mr. Braddon's strictures upon labor's responsibility for strikes, that the men were not always responsible for them. He then described the conditions existing on board ship, such as had made it necessary for the sailors to fight for the chance to live decently. After relating some of the incidents in connection with German ruthlessness on the sea, Captain Tupper told of the plans that had been made by the Seamen's Union to punish the Germans.

"On Feb. 24," he continued, "we shall have in London a meeting of representatives of all the sailors of the world. The English, French, Italian, Belgian, and Scandinavian seamen have agreed to the program laid out, and we hope at that time the Americans will join us.

"For seven years we refuse to allow a German on any of our ships, or to carry one ounce of German cargo. More than that, the navigating officers during that time will never trip a line to the pirate flag of Germany. Gentlemen, this is not hatred; it is justice. Whether you businessmen like it or not, we are going to do it. And I want to tell you that in England labor and capital are getting together. We have the Employers' and Employes' Alliance, in which all the representatives of capital and all the representatives of labor are meeting to discuss their problems, and we are never going to strike again if we can help it.

"I bring this message to you from the most powerful union in the world, representing 11,000,000 voters who are for boycott. It is your sons and our sons that died on the battlefields of France, and it is for them that we must see justice done."

FAVORS FARE ZONE SYSTEM.

Committee Reports to Public Service Commissions Association.

In a report prepared by the Committee on Public Utility Rates of the National Association of Public Service Commissions, appears the statement that the zone system of fares "probably offers the most practical method whereby increased income may be obtained by the street railroad companies." A similar suggestion, made by County Clerk Schneider, has been held in abeyance until every effort has been exhausted by the companies in this city to obtain from the authorities permission to raise the fare rates.

The National Committee said that where the zone system was already in effect and the income insufficient to meet the needs of the company, an increase in the number of zones and the shortening of the zone lengths would doubtless prove effective in producing additional income. The report states:

"The right of the public to regulate and control the operation of public utilities is no longer questioned, and there can be no valid objection to such regulation and control, provided it is judiciously and equitably administered in the interests of all concerned."

The report adds:

"All service should be paid for by the corporation, school, department, or individual to whom it is furnished, whether furnished by the municipality or privately owned utility. The interest of the consumer and the taxpayer is not identical, and both should be treated with even-handed justice by the commissions."

WANT KNITTERS FOR NAVY.

Many Garments Needed and Navy League Offers Wool at Cost.

For men serving at the Navy Rifle Range near New York City, 310 mufflers, 310 sweaters, 620 pairs of socks, and 310 wristlets are needed at once, according to an appeal issued yesterday by Mrs. Herbert L. Satterlee, Chairman of the Comforts Committee of the Navy League.

Because of the general let-down in knitting the committee is unable except, in part, to fill this and similar requests for warm garments. In order to arouse the public to the need for continuing knitting for the men still in service, a special sale of wool at 70 cents and 75 cents a hank is being held at the committee's headquarters, 405 Madison Avenue.

"The loss caused by these prices is borne entirely by the committee," said Mrs. Satterlee. "All gifts of money are put into our Free Wool Fund, for which we still need contributions, as we have distributed more than $34,000 worth of wool through this means. Garments made from wool purchased here need not be returned to us, though we specify that they must go to men in the service.

"To meet urgent requests for several thousands of each sort of garment—sweaters, socks, helmets, mufflers, wristlets, mittens, and bed socks for convalescent soldiers in New York hospitals—we are urging all women who patronize this sale to use the wool up as quickly as possible and come back for more. The sale lasts over Wednesday, and mail orders will be accepted."

VALUE NEW JERSEY RAILS.

TRENTON, N. J., Jan. 18.—The State Board of Taxes and Assessments today announced that it had valued the property of railroads and canals of New Jersey for 1919, on the same basis and at the same figures as placed upon them for 1918, as directed by the Legislature for the first year's operation of the revised act. The aggregate valuation of each of the larger railroad systems in the State follows:

Pennsylvania Railroad system, $112,746,902; Central Railroad of New Jersey, $79,507,587; Philadelphia & Reading Railway, $36,757,612; Erie Railroad, $29,364,489; Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad $20,703,490; New York, Susquehanna & Western Railroad, $7,850,000; Lehigh Valley Railroad, $36,-037,485; New York Central Railroad, $15,841,232; railroads not classified, $15,402,509. Total valuation $361,531,949.

MILK STRIKE ENDS; THE FARMERS WIN

Distributers Agree to Give $4.01 a Hundred Pounds for Month of January.

CONSUMERS PAY 16 CENTS

Producers Make Concessions from January Rate for February and March.

COMMISSION TO CONTINUE

District Attorney's Office Attacks Settlement as Unfair to the Consumer.

Through the efforts of the Governor's Milk Commission the producers and distributers settled their differences yesterday morning and agreed upon prices to be paid to the farmer for his milk for the months of January, February, and March, and also fixed 16 cents a quart as the legal price to the consumer for January for Grade B bottled milk.

The farmers won their fight for $4.01 a hundred pounds for January. For February they are to receive $3.84, and in March the price will be $3.31. The price to the consumer for February and March was not fixed, but it was suggested it would probably be 16 cents in February and 15½ cents in March.

Although it will be several days before the normal supply of milk will be coming from the old sources, owing to the fact that the distributers have their cans scattered over thirteen States from which they have been receiving milk since the strike began, on Jan. 1, the city will probably have a normal supply tomorrow or Tuesday. Receipts yesterday were 1,587,413 quarts, 212,587 quarts under the normal daily consumption. It is thought that the members of the Dairymen's League will receive enough cans by tomorrow to supply the deficit. As the cans are returned to the city from the new sources of supply they will be sent to league members.

The Dairymen's League officials regard the settlement as a complete victory for the farmers. "We were fighting for the principle of the Warren formula, by which milk was shown to cost the farmer $4.01 a hundred pounds for January," said E. R. Eastman of the league. "The farmers told the distributers they could not produce milk in January for less, and the distributers have agreed to our price."

Mr. Eastman said the big thing that would result from the strike was the co-operative milk stations that are being established all over the territory by the farmers to take care of their suplus milk in normal times, and in case of another emergency put them into a position to sell milk to consumers.

"The matter is settled, at least for the present," said Chairman Robert E. Dowling of the Governor's Milk Commission, at the conclusion of a short session held in his office yesterday morning, with all members present. "The agreement which was reached yesterday, the terms of which I telephoned to Governor Smith, was reaffirmed this morning. The matter of detail regarding the putting of the agreement into effect has been compromised, and the agreement goes into immediate effect. This is to say, operations will be resumed and continue indefinitely. The plan does not make reference to any particular producer of distributer, but is effective as to all concerns in both groups.

"The commission will continue in existence. There will be a meeting in this office on Jan. 28, when we will see how the agreement has worked. Meanwhile, if any contention arises complaint will be made and the commission will get to work on it. You may say that if either side tries to put over any tricks, it will get out. In such a case, the whole matter will be put squarely up to the public so that it, the court of last resort, may act."

"Meetings of the commission, lacking any disturbing element which may force its dissolution, will be held on the 15th of each month. That is the time the program decided upon this morning. The price of 16 cents is announced as the legal price per quart in the city. If you pay more, then put it up to us."

When the attention was called to the fact, as stated by one or more of those present, that 17 and 18 cents are being collected for a quart of milk, Mr. Dowling declined to go into that phase of the matter, but intimated that such an overcharge was probably to be blamed on the driver.

The milk strike began on Jan. 1, when the distributers refused to pay producers $4.01 a hundred pounds, and made a counterproposal of $3.60. The farmers stopped shipping milk except to dealers who paid $4.01. The New York Milk Conference Board, representing the distributers, made arrangements for obtaining milk outside of the usual territory. Milk came from New England, Western, and Southern States, and the supply had almost reached normal when the settlement was made. The Governor's commission was composed of Chairman Dowling, who represented the consumers; R. D. Cooper, President, and John D. Miller, Vice President of the Dairymen's League, representing the producers, and Charles A. Wetant of the Sheffield Farms Products Company and Isaac A. Von Bomel of the Sheffield Farms, representing the distributers. Health Commissioner Copeland was appointed to the commission as a representative of the consumers, but resigned, and no successor was appointed.

Assistant District Attorney John T. Dooling, who is conducting a John Doe inquiry before Chief City Magistrate McAdoo, was not pleased with the settlement. "Without desiring to criticise or reflect in any way on the Governor's commission," he said, "let me point out that at the John Doe hearing yesterday it was proved that milk was produced throughout New York State during December at a cost of a little over 5 cents a quart, including all cost allowances of every nature. From facts and figures in possession of the District Attorney and from testimony given before Chief City Magistrate McAdoo, it appears that there is no justification for the price of 16 cents a quart for Grade B milk to the consumer during January, February, and March."

Mr. Dooling said he failed to see where the consumer was benefited through the settlement, and added: "It would seem that the producers and distributers have again succeeded in agreeing what each should receive without much regard for the consumer."

The investigation of the milk situation will be continued before Magistrate McAdoo.

PUSH Y.W.C.A. WORK ABROAD

Four Delegations Going to Foreign Countries to Study Progress.

Four deputations of prominent American women are about to start for South America, India, China, and Japan, sent out by the National Young Women's Christian Association War Work Council to see at first hand the work that is being done in those countries by the Y. W. C. A. and to consider plans for its advancement.

In its work among foreign-born women in New York the Y. W. C. A. has opened a branch at 335 East 149th Street, to be known as the Bronx International Institute for Young Women, where English classes have been started. Members, some of whom are young married women of the neighborhood, are Italian, Armenian, Lettish, and Polish. Vocational study is soon to be started. The work is along the lines of the International Institute already in operation at 106 East Thirtieth Street.

Lectures to Aid War Relief.

Three lectures, the proceeds to be divided between American Free Milk and Relief for Italy and the American Women's Hospitals, are to be given at the Ritz-Carlton on the afternoons of Jan. 27 and 28 at 3 P. M. and on the morning of the 29th at 11 A. M. by Henry J. Davison. Mr. Davison's subject will be "The Psychology of Color in Interior Decoration." Tickets are $2. The same lecture will be given each day. Tickets can be obtained of Mrs. John A. Drake at the Hotel Vanderbilt.

Friends of the 306th to Meet.

A meeting of members of the Association of Friends of the 306th Infantry will be held at the Washington Irving High School, Seventeenth Street and Irving Place, on Jan. 21 at 8:15 P. M. All persons having relatives in the regiment will be cordially welcomed. The only address will be made by a returned battalion commander of the regiment, who will tell the graphic story of the regiment's experience in France and on the fighting line from the time of sailing.

RETURNING ARMIES ENLIST RED CROSS

Tasks Multiply in Transporting Wounded and Finding Jobs for the Able.

"ITALY SUNDAY" IS NEXT

Rumania Appeals Through Senator—Committee for Devastated France Makes a Report.

The Red Cross Shop continues to offer attractions which have induced visitors to the shop at 527 Fifth Avenue to add materially to the funds of the organization. In the same collection from which an autographed letter of Theodore Roosevelt was recently sold for $75, there are many more, including letters of Emile Zola, Captain Dreyfus, President Diaz of Mexico, and Jules Verne. Those in charge say the prices are low for signed records of celebrities.

On Thursday another auction will be held, similar in character to that recently conducted by De Wolf Hopper. This time George M. Cohan will exercise his wiles upon those present, while a committee from the New York County Chapter under the direction of Mrs. William T. Carrington, will have charge. Those assisting will be Mrs. Joseph Truesdale, Mrs. Norman Mackay, Mrs. Norris Thorne, Mrs. Gordon Abbott, Mrs. Mitchell Henry, and Mrs. Edward Ely. Marie Dressler will give a talk in the Bird Cage Tea Room of the shop, at 4 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon.

Several sections of the Red Cross are more busily engaged than ever. The Motor Corps has been removing an unusual number of patients from the debarkation hospitals, in anticipation of the arrival of troop ships during the week, carrying new quotas of wounded men. The Home Service Section is finding jobs for returned soldiers and sailors, while the classes in dietetics are developing under Miss Flora G. Sell.

The Red Cross, in a statement just issued, calls attention to the large reserve stock of knitted articles on hand, making it unnecessary for the volunteer women workers to do any further knitting. These volunteers, however, have much to keep them busy in making refugee garments, for which there is increasing demand from the devastated countries.

Next Sunday for Italians.

Robert Underwood Johnson, President of the New York Committee of the Italian War Relief Fund of America, has sent a letter to clergymen of New York, in which an appeal is made for the Italian war orphans. In part, the letter says:

> On behalf of our committee I respectfully request that on Sunday, Jan. 26, 1919, or if that date be otherwise pre-empted soon afterward, your church offering be devoted to the War Orphans of Italy Fund and the proceeds sent to our Treasurer, S. Reading Bertron, at 347 Madison Avenue.
> On that day a great mass meeting in tribute to Italy and in promotion of friendly relations between the two countries will be held in New York, at which Charles Evans Hughes and other distinguished men will speak. We hope you will also take occasion to say a good word at that time for our brave ally.
> The plain fact is that comparatively little has been done by America for Italy, which preceded us in the war by two years, and the citizens of which form an immense part of our population. The reconstruction needs of that country, especially among children, are immense and of the most serious nature.

Direct Aid to Rumania.

Senator Gogu Negulescu of Rumania has issued an appeal for his country, quoting the recent messages of Herbert Hoover as well as three diplomats representing the different countries and from the Queen of Rumania. The Senator says, in part:

> The people of the United States, who have generosity and nobility of heart, cannot remain indifferent to this despairing appeal from a nation dying of hunger. All money sent to the Rumanian Relief Committee, Dr. T. Tileston Wells, Consul of Rumania, 43 Cedar Street, New York City, Executive Chairman, through Henry Clews, Treasurer, 15 Broad Street, New York City, will constitute an act of humanity worthy of a civilized people.
> On the other hand, I address myself to all Rumanians, whether citizens of the United States or not, who should rouse themselves and fulfill their duty toward their brothers, who are suffering such misery and dying for want of food. I appeal to the Jews who have come from Rumania, their birthplace, and who must not forget that today all their co-religionists, brothers, relations, and friends living in Rumania are now full Rumanian citizens.
> I, personally, awaiting the first possible moment to return to Rumania, will gladly make myself responsible for the delivery of all packages containing clothing, shoes, and other necessary articles which Rumanians or Jews in this country wish to send to their families in Rumania.

For Devastated France.

The American Committee for Devastated France is now aiding the return of families dispossessed from their land during the war. What the French have provided toward rehabilitation, and how Americans may help by accelerating actual relief is told in the committee's recital of the French law, passed by Parliament, whereby abandoned farms could be reoccupied and the soil restored for about $75 an acre:

> Refugee farmers had attempted to claim their portion of Government allowance but with no success. The American Committee for Devastated France, however, took over two large farms whereon it established many refugee families from the Aisne and gave them shelter and occupation in cultivating the neglected areas.
> The committee then applied to the Government for the allowance to which, under the Compere-Morel law, it was entitled for the re-cultivation of abandoned land, and according to a cable received at National Headquarters the French Government has given the committee $30,000 for this work.
> Thus a precedent has been established which will be of inestimable value to all farmers in France, because this test case brought out by the American Committee means in due course a much greater benefit to France than can be estimated by the mere payment of $30,000.

Beginning Over With the Children.

In this report, just issued by the American Committee for Devastated France, the actual working out and the cost of the redemption is made concrete by an account of the colony at Boullay-Thierry, where 125 children are being cared for at the cost of $1 a day each. The report says:

> This seems greatly in excess of the $36 or $72 a year asked by other war relief societies, but the difference lies in the fact that our children have been under German rule for four years, without physical or mental care, and are in consequence undeveloped. Our efforts are to regain this loss of four years in a child's life and bring these children up to a normal standard. The feeding of the children has to have special care after four years' slow starvation, and the dentistry and medical care are important.
> In many instances American schools ask us how they as a unit may help the children of France. Several schools have raised enough money to support another school in a French village. The estimated cost for this donation in establishing a school is $1,200. One of Germany's rules published in her book on warfare and given to every soldier for guidance is "to destroy equally all the enemy's intellectual and material resources," and, following this precept, the German army left no trace of school accessories nor of school buildings.
> To equip a schoolroom with the accessories demanded by the French Government costs $500. Teachers appointed by the French Government can visit two villages a day by means of our transportation service, and the domestic science teacher and the manual training teacher can exchange morning and afternoon, so that the expense of their salaries is divided between the two schools and amounts to $350 apiece for each school.

The report adds that France "controls the education of its children and erects school buildings," and that the temporary shacks put up by the Government for shelter "are occupied only until such time as permanent rebuilding is possible."

Secretary Daniels states that all future Capital Ships of the U.S. Navy will be electrically driven

The significance of this decision lies in the well-known fact that, because of the great resistance of water against a propeller, no high-speed (or automobile) engine has ever been serviceably successful in driving even a small speed boat. No greater demonstration is therefore possible of the efficiency and economy of the electrical drive.

NATIONAL COMMISSION TAKES STEPS TO FIGHT THE PROPOSED INCREASE IN TAX AT BALL PARKS

LEAGUES PROTEST AGAINST TAX RATE

National Commission Will Seek to Prevent Increase to 20% Proposed by Government.

HEYDLER MAKES APPEAL

In Letter to Senate Committee He Says Increased Burden on Fans Will Decrease Attendance.

When the National Commission goes to Washington next week to talk over the release of the baseball players who are now overseas, it will also offer to the Department of Internal Revenue a protest against the high war tax of 20 per cent. which is to be collected next season.

This 20 per cent. tax question has been giving the baseball people a great deal of worry, and many of the club owners at the recent meetings here predicted that if the Government did not change the tax it might have a depressing effect on the attendance.

Following the protest which has been lodged by the theatrical interests, President John A. Heydler of the National League has sent to the Senate committee in Washington the following letter:

"We earnestly and respectfully protest as unfair the proposed increase of tax on our admissions to 20 per cent. Baseball is the national sport and appeals to all the people because of the reasonable prices of admission charged. These prices have not been increased except fractionally in the last ten years.

"We are now endeavoring to recover from the great losses caused by the war and need every aid of the Government to perpetuate the game. To levy at this time an additional tax of 10 per cent. would seriously effect our attendance and thus defeat the purpose of the tax.

"Before such a tax is imposed we appeal to and request the Joint Committee of Congress to give us a hearing."

President Johnson of the American League, President Heydler of the National League, and Chairman August Herrmann of Cincinnati will go to Washington this week and will place their case before the proper officials.

The war tax of 10 per cent. last season had some effect on the attendance, which was not up to that of other seasons. However, there were other contributing factors besides the war tax, so it is difficult to estimate how much of the falling off was due to the 10 per cent. tax. A 20 per cent. tax, however, is pretty sure to result in keeping down the attendance to a marked degree. Witnessing a baseball game is merely recreation to most spectators and is something that they will first dispense with in the event of a heavy tax.

It is not anticipated that the commission will meet with any opposition to its request to get the release of the thirty-two major league players who are overseas. The clubs will not go South until about March 21, so there is over two months to arrange for their return. It is understood that the Government is willing to release the soldiers who can show that their former means of occupation is waiting for them.

Yale Sloane, the outfielder of the Browns, who has been in the navy, got his release from service yesterday when he signed his contract with the Browns for next season. The baseball men believe that all the players now in the camps in this country will be released just as soon as they are signed up for next year. The next few weeks will be busy ones for the baseball clubs. The Giants and Yanks will send out their contracts early this week and will round up their players as soon as possible. The Giants have lost track of Pitcher Jess Barnes, who is in the army, but it is understood that he is at Camp Funston. As some of the troops at this camp are slated to go to the Mexican border, the New York club is anxious to find out just when he expects to be released.

Minors Reach Agreement.

A tentative agreement between the new organization of them inor leagues and the National Commission relating to the recognition of territorial rights, contracts, and reservations, was drawn up yesterday and has been sgned by Chairman Herrmann f the commission. Presidents Heydler and Johnson may sign the document early this week.

The only probable hitch in the proceedings may come if the heads of the two major leagues decide not to recognize territorial rights to leagues which have gone out of business. The minors want the rights to the territory of the leagues which still exist and those which have existed in the past.

The agreement was drawn up by a committee made up of President Michael Sexton of the National Association of Minor Leagues, Secretary John H. Farrell, Al Tearney, Chicago; David L. Fultz, Walter Morris, Texas League, and Ed Hanlon, Western League. The document is only a temporary affair and was drafted to cover conditions until a permanent agreement can be reached.

That there is still the best of feelings between the minor and major leagues was shown yesterday when Business Manager Bobby Quinn of the Browns, purchased Third Baseman Herman Bronkie from the Indianapolis Club.

There is an abundance of players now on the market, and the Class AA clubs are going slow about picking their managers for the coming season. It was reported yesterday that Clarence Rowland, the former manager of the White Sox, had made an offer to buy the Milwaukee Club of the American Association. Al Tearney of Chicago has also been mentioned as a probable buyer. Several managers have been suggested for the Brewers, but Al Bridwell, formerly short stop of the Giants, seems to lead all the candidates at the present time. It is believed that Rube Oldring will manager the Toronto Club of the International League.

The Board of Arbitration of the minor leagues yesterday heard evidence in the controversy between President James J. McCafferty of the Toronto Club and President James C. McGill of the Indianapolis Club, over Nap Lajoie. McCaffery charges that McGill tampered with Lajoie while he was still the property of the Toronto Club. Decision was reserved and both sides were ordered to submit documentary evidence in the case.

Handicap Road Race Tuesday.

The next handicap road race of the Lower Manhattan Athletic League, will be conducted over the Clark House A. A. course Tuesday night. Officials of the Clark House A. A. have mapped out a course which will carry the field of runners past Debarkation Hospital 3, at Sixth Avenue and Eighteenth Street. This arrangement was adopted to give the wounded soldiers a chance to witness the field as it races over part of its four and one-half mile journey.

New Class on Premium List.

A new class has been added to the premium list of the Westminster Kennel Club's forty-third annual dog show to be held at Madison Square Garden from Feb. 19 to 22, inclusive, for the benefit of the American Red Cross. The new class is for Cairn terrier puppies, dogs and females, with prizes of $10, $5, and $3 for the first three places. The entries for the show will close with Superintendent George W. Call, 18 East Forty-first Street, Jan. 27.

MIDDIES SEEK REVENGE.

Hope to Break Baseball Hoodoo with West Point.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Jan. 18.—The renewal of the annual baseball and football games between the Naval and Military Academies will almost certainly take place, beginning with the baseball game, which will probably be played at West Point on May 31. The last game was played in 1916 at Annapolis.

The rule, which went into effect when the United States entered the war, that the teams of the service schools should not play away from their home grounds, is still in effect, and no definite arrangements can be made until it is abrogated. However, it is believed that this will be done soon. The Naval Academy will have no objection to the plan of the Military Academy to use on their nine members of the class which was graduated ahead of time, but which has been ordered back for a post-graduate course.

Sportsmanship dictated the course which the Naval Academy authorities pursued in agreeing to the playing of the post-graduates at West Point, as otherwise the Army folks would have been confined to one class, the lowest, for material for their teams, but they might also have remembered what followed a game played under conditions somewhat similar to those which exist now, and the fact that a long continued series of Army victories followed.

The series between the service schools is a remarkable one in several ways. The Navy has not held its own with its Army rivals, as it has done in football, but has lost all but three of the fifteen games played. The first game played was at Annapolis in 1901, and the Army won, 4 to 3. The next year the Navy won at West Point, 5 to 3, and each of the next three games played was also won by the team playing away from its own grounds. In 1907 the break came, and the Army won at West Point, 6 to 5. In 1908 the Navy's hoodoo game was played at Annapolis, and since then three has been an unbroken chain of Army victories.

The midshipmen feel that they have an excellent chance of winning this year. They will play at West Point, where all but one of the Navy victories have been scored, but there are more practical reasons for their confidence. There will be a larger pick at Annapolis, and it includes much good new material. In particular, confidence is placed in Baker, elusive left-hander, who entered the Naval Academy with the latest class. He has done great work in the class games. Finally, West Point will not have the services of Sammy Strong, who has coached the nine when it won most of its victories over the Navy. On the other hand, that successful college coach, Billy Lush, is going to get the Navy nine ready for its effort this year, and there is confidence here that the time has come to break the Army's winning streak.

PLAN WORLD-WIDE LEAGUE.

Bill Lange to Organize Game in European Countries.

Bill Lange of the old Chicago Club and great fielder and base runner in his time, will sail for France this week in the uniform of the Y. M. C. A. on a big baseball mission.

The formation of an International Baseball League, a combination of England, France, Belgium, and possibly Italy, whose pennant winners would meet those of the United States, the series to be played alternately in this country and Europe, is in Lange's hands to bring to realization. He believes the time is now ripe for such an enterprise, and he will set about making arrangements the moment he lands on French soil.

Ban Johnson has commissioned Lange as his European representative to look over the field with a view to taking the pennant winners of the American League next Fall for a European tour for the entertainment of the allied soldiers. The matter is entirely in Lange's hands, and his judgment will be final with Johnson as to whether the team shall go abroad. Johnson also has given his promise to try to arrange for the American League winners to join the expedition, assuring all the principal European cities of an exhibition series of strictly world championship baseball.

Lange will take charge, as general baseball directors for the Y. M. C. A. in Europe, of the scores or army and navy teams developing abroad, the biggest baseball league ever formed. Lnage will have his headquarters in Paris, with representatives in all parts of Europe.

John McGraw has made Lange his chief European scout. McGraw believes there is plenty of rich material in the teams the army and navy have developed in France, and with Lange as his sleuth he will try to get some promising players.

Lange also takes with him about $40,000 worth of baseball paraphernalia, the result of Clark Griffith's Ball and Bat Fund, which he will distribute to the army and navy teams. Bill has no advisers or committee to tie him up, and he will dole out the equipment just as he sees fit, indicating the confidence Griffith and his club have in the veteran.

Since Lange began, over a year ago, to arrange to get into the service of the Y. M. C. A., baseball men have had their eye on him as a possible European representative. Bill ended his great career as a player way back in 1900, but he has never ceased to be a baseball man. As a member of the Olympic Club in San Francisco, where he has built up a prosperous real estate and insurance business, Bill has been active in all sorts of athletic activities.

"When any one mentions International League," said Bill, "he is sure to get a laugh, but I believe, and it seems that some of the biggest baseball men in the country see it my way, too, that now is the time to get it started. Baseball is in for the biggest boom in its history, because both sides of the Atlantic, instead of only one, are on the job now, and thousands of people in England and France who never knew a steal from a pop fly are getting to be fans.

"My scheme is to pick some good baseball organizers, either professionals or college men, and send them to England, Belgium, and Italy to work up an international League organization. As fast as basebll develops in those countries leagues will be formed, and I am confident that by the beginning of Summer those three countries will have leagues which, if they are not in permanent form, will be the basis for permanent ones. If the Interntional League idea takes hold, England, France, Belgium, and Italy will have their national series, their European series, and then they will enter a real world series with the pennant winners over here. We could have the games played alternately on this side and abroad, probably running them in order with the teams of the different nations.

BOXING AT PENN STATE.

Representative May Be Sent to Intercollegiate Tourney.

STATE COLLEGE, Penn., Jan. 18.—Under the direction of Assistant Physical Director Harlow, interclass boxing is being boomed at Penn State, and the sport is rapidly assuming major importance among winter athletics. Boxing has always been encouraged at the Blue and White institution, but it is only since the engagement of Harlow that it has really come into prominence.

Over fifty men have already reported for the sport and practice is being held every evening. Credit is being given for gym drill to those who report regularly. Several inter-class meets are scheduled to be held, and the winners may possibly be sent to some intercollegiate tournament.

With the opening game of the basket ball season out of the way the 'Varsity team is ready for the Eastern trip, which starts on January 29 with the University of Pennsylvania. Muhlenberg, Lafayette and Lehigh are the other teams which will be met on the trip.

U. S. G. A. OFFICIALS TO APPROVE PLANS

Resumption of Golf Tournaments on Pre-War Basis to be Arranged by Governing Bodies.

Golf happenings within the next fortnight will have an important bearing on the game's future. Three annual meetings, scheduled for this city, are anxiously awaited by links devotees, already looking ahead to what promises to eclipse all other seasons in competitive activity and general interest. Once the governing bodies stamp their official approval, pending plans will rapidly mature.

First of the three meetings will be the annual gathering of the United States Golf Association at the Waldorf Friday evening of this week. Delegates from member clubs all over the land will exchange ideas and in all probability vote to set the machinery in motion again with pre-war speed.

No one for a moment doubts the resumption of championships. Some time ago the Executive Committee asked the Oakmont, Brae Burn, and Shawnee Clubs, which had been awarded the titular events for 1917, if they still cared to stage the attractions, and all responded in the affirmative. It therefore merely remains for the delegates to vote for a resumption of the tournaments.

Some time ago the nominating committee presented its findings, which consisted of the renaming of the entire ticket. Frederick S. Wheeler of Apawamis, is President; Howard F. Whitney of Nassau, is Secretary, and Mortimer N. Buckner of Garden City, Treasurer. As there is never an opposition ticket, the election will undoubtedly be unanimous.

Whether or not any agitation will be started anent the rules, is largely a matter of conjecture. In all likelihood the future will sooner or later see a getting together between the governing body of Great Britain and the United States Golf Association, as had been planned shortly before the war. When that time arrives, the stymie and other questions that have caused differences of opinion will come up for settlement.

On Tuesday, Jan. 28, the New Jersey State Golf Association representatives will gather for their annual confab. This time the meeting place will be in the council room of the Princeton Club. Little seems to be left for the delegates to do save elect a President and arrange for the championship. Deal has already been determined upon, and as forthe date, it looks now like the third week in July.

The third meeting in this city is carded for the Biltmore on Jan. 30, when the Women's Metropolitan Golf Association will hold forth. Advance information is to the effect that women are keen for a resumption of competitive activities. The championship will be over some Jersey course, probably Arcola.

It is estimated that between 600,000 and 800,000 men, young and old, hold memberships in golf clubs of this country. A basis of comparison to discover what percentage went to war is afforded in the case of a prominent club in this city, where 57 out of an active membership of 400 enlisted. It is believed that that showing, while probably slightly above normal, is a fair estimate of what golf club members have done.

That would indicate a representation of approximately 15 per cent. But it doesn't begin to tell the story, at that, for there is no other branch of sport where so many men past the enlistment age were actively identified with the war. Those who didn't go into military service weren't sitting back idle or simply applauding the sacrifices of their golfing mates. More than half a million dollars for the Red Cross and two or three hundred thousand for other war funds in 1918 represent what was done by golfers through tournament play, special competitions, and exhibition matches.

There have been lost or maimed so many golfers of Great Britain and France that club memberships there will be found to have shrunk greatly during the last four years. It is true, however, that many young men were introduced to golf through the war. Not only in the personnel of the golfing fraternity have the clubs overseas suffered. The golfing areas will have some way to go to come back. Club property has been converted, because of the intensive character of the farming and vegetable gardening demanded, into agricultural areas. In one county, Surrey, in England, 60,000 acres controlled by sixty golf clubs were used last Spring for crops and grazing.

WILL HOLD TITLE TOURNEY.

Philadelphia Golfers Vote to Resume Championship Fixtures.

The Golf Association of Philadelphia voted unanimously to resume its title fixtures. In addition it was decided to in augurate an extra tournament which will hereafter be made an annual fixture.

A decidedly progressive step was taken in the course of the meeting when a resolution was adopted providing for the employment of injured soldiers, sailors and marines as caddie masters and workers about the various courses.

No dates were set for the annual championships. The season's fixtures, however, were distributed among the clubs. The open championship will be held at the Whitemarsh Valley Country Club and the amateur title tourney at the Philmont Country Club on a date to be selected by the Executive Committee of the G. A. P. The North Hills C. C. will be the scene of the junior tournament and the inter-club chmapionship will be decided over the links of the Philadelphia Cricket Club.

Robert W. Lesley of the Merion Cricket Club was re-elected President. The other officers chosen were: Howard W. Perrin, Pine Valley, Vice President; Francis B. Warner, Philadelphia Cricket Club, Secretary-Treasurer.

C. C. N. Y. DEFEATS ARMY.

Projan Big Aid in 17 to 14 Victory for Collegians.

WEST POINT, Jan. 18.—Displaying plenty of speed and excellent team work and guarding, the College of the City of New York beat the Army at basket ball this afternoon in a close and exciting game by a score of 17 to 14. The visitors took the lead at the outset and only once early in the opening period relinquished it for a brief spell. At half time City College was leading 11 to 0. The cadets were going fast at the finish but displayed lack of team work and were unable to penetrate the collegians' strong defense. Cranston caged all the Army's baskets except one. Projan's fine work was a feature of the collegians' play.

Line-up:

Policemen Play Billiards.

Patrolman Joseph Fogel and Patrolman Herbert Volberg, both of the 154th Precinct, Brooklyn, will clash in a billiard match tomorrow at Lawler Brothers' Academy in Brooklyn. The match is for the championship of the Ridgewood district of Brooklyn. The two "cops" will play a 200-point match, in blocks of 50 points each. Games will be played on Mondays and Wednesdays.

ENGLISH GOLFER COMING.

Miss Vera Ramsay Will Return to Boston Next Season.

Women golfers in the Boston district are looking forward with interest to the contemplated return to this country of Miss Vera Ramsay, of Leatherhead, Surrey, England. Miss Ramsay, it is reported, plans to take up a permanent residence in Boston. It is expected that she will arrive before the beginning of the season, and will be eligible to compete in this year's Boston championship and other leading tournaments.

Miss Ramsay has been devoting her attention entirely to war work since she returned to England. She has been driving a motor car as a member of the Women's Royal Auxiliary Force. Miss Ramsay attracted unusual attention through her work on the links in 1915 and 1916. She came to this country in 1915, and in the Boston championship of that year gained her first prominence when she made the lowest score, a 93, in the qualifying round. Miss Ramsay defeated Miss Margaret Curtis, three times national women's champion, in the final by 7 up and 6 to play. In 1916 Miss Ramsay successfully defended her Boston title. Later Miss Ramsey participated in the women's Eastern championship tournament, which was won by Mrs. W. A. Gavin. Miss Ramsay finished fifth.

BASEBALL STARS RETURN.

West Virginia Players Are Mustered Out of Service.

MORGANTOWN, W. Va., Jan. 18.—There is considerable talk of baseball here already. A letter was dispatched more than a month ago to "Kemp" Shelton, last year's successful coach, who is now in France, but no reply having come from him a cablegram was sent him today asking if he plans to return in time to tutor the diamond candidates.

There is a wealth of baseball material on hand. Latterner, Dorsey, and Dawson of last year's team are here in school, having been discharged from the S. A. T. C. late in December. Gregg has been discharged from the Tank service, and Rodgers, Herrick, Armstrong, and Charles Garden, also of last year's team, have received their discharges. Bill Cardon, the second sacker of the 1917 team, will also be back next semester, having been mustered out at Camp Lee. In addition to these men there are Martin, Behen, Fisher, Ball, McGannon, Ransom, and several other new men available who are know nto have baseball ability.

CORNELL STARS RETURN.

Sharpe Now Has Good Material for Basket Ball Team.

ITHACA, N. Y., Jan. 18.—The return to the university of three of the ablest basket ball players Cornell has turned out in the last three years has revolutionized the court situation here and insures a fast team for the Ithacans. Ten days ago it seemed certain that the Cornell five would start out with almost green material, not a 'Varsity man having reported for practice. Now there are three former 'Varsity players in the lineup.

The veterans who have come back from the army are Howard Ortner, forward and second of the 1917-18 league point scorers; W. M. Kendall, Acting Captain and guard of last year's team, and Stewart, a forward on last year's five.

With these men back, Al Sharpe has effected a reorganization of his team. Ortner and Stewart will play forwards and Kendall right guard. The other two positions will probably be filled by Molinet at centre and Sullivan at left guard. Both of these men were on the freshman team last Winter.

TO HONOR RICKENBACKER.

Automobile Association to Hold Banquet for American Ace.

Captain Edward V. Rickenbacker, erstwhile champion automobile race driver, and, by virtue of his official record of bringing down twenty-six "Hun" fliers, America's leading "Ace," is to be the guest of honor at a banquet arranged by the Contest Board of the American Automobile Association, on behalf of the automotive sport and industry of the United States, which will be held in the ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria Feb. 3.

Captain "Eddie" Rickenbacker, whose name heads the list of sixty-three American "Aces" recently made public by General Pershing, has sailed from Liverpool for America. His cabled acceptance for the banquet was received several days ago. In addition to the banquet a material and substantial appreciation of Captain Rickenbacker's great military aerial performances will be provided. His mother will also be present.

Covers will be set at the banquet for 1,000. Fred J. Wagner, veteran starter of automobile races, who has often given Rickenbacker the checkered flag which means victory on the auto race course, is managing the affair.

SAYS BASEBALL IS SLOW.

English Critic Complains of Pitchers' Antics in Box.

An English authority on sports appears to have discovered an outstanding defect in American baseball. Among other things, he says the game is entirely too slow and blames the pitcher for taking too much time to decide whether he will throw the ball to the batter or to first base. The following is part of the criticism of a recent game, which appeared in The London Field:

"The American pitcher, in a match against Canada, was so deliberate in his methods as to be a subject of wonder not unmixed with admiration. He always walked to his place with extreme slowness, generally looked around three or four times if a man was at first base, raised his hands as if about to throw, dropped them, and twiddeled the ball several times in his glove, swung his arms in a windmill fashion, and, finally, when one had almost given him up in despair, threw the ball at the batter—if he did not throw it toward the man at the base.

"Several times he began his duties by holding the ball at arm's length and standing motionless for some seconds, after which he went through the usual performance. Once or twice he altered his mind, signaled to the catcher, met him half way, had a consultation, and went to give instructions to a fieldsman before getting to work. Yet baseball enthusiasts did not seem to recognize that there was anything slow about these things."

Service Men to Skate.

Service men will have an opportunity for ice skating competition tomorrow night at the Notlek Rink, 119th Street and Claremont Avenue, in a half-mile scratch race arranged especially for them. The medals for the first three to finish have been donated by the New York Athletic Club. In addition to this race there will be a one-mile handicap race. The Kingston Ice Rink in Brooklyn will be the scene of two races Tuesday night. The events will be at one mile and one-half mile, both handicap races.

Cochran to Play Schaefer Here.

Walker Cochran, young Chicago rival for Willie Hoppe's balk-line title, will commence a week's match against Jacob Schaefer tomorrow afternoon at Daly's Academy, Forty-ninth Street and Broadway. The match will be for 3,600 points, at 18.2 balk line, in blocks of 300 each afternoon and evening throughout the week. A purse will be divided between the players, the winner receiving 60 and the loser 40 per cent. The victorious cue wielder will challenge Willie Hoppe to a title match.

HARVARD OUTLINES FOOTBALL POLICY

Crimson May Ask Percy Haughton to Again Coach Gridiron Eleven.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Jan. 18.—The policy that will be followed in Harvard football, as well as in other of the college athletic activities, is expected to be decided tomorrow evening at the organization meeting of the newly elected Athletic Committee. Harvard football should be little different next Fall than it has been in previous years, although there is a possibility that some cut in expense may be made.

The Advisory Committee on the sport is now waiting to go ahead with plans for the football season, including the retaining of several coaches, the formation of a schedule, and other general business connected with the Spring and Fall work. With the approval of the Athletic Committee within a few weeks the football schedule will be ready for announcement, and the coaches, or at least some of them, signed for the Fall.

The one big question at Harvard is whether Percy D. Haughton will coach the eleven again. Haughton has served nine years as head coach. It is believed that he will be only too willing to renew his football contract at Harvard, to wipe out that 6 to 3 defeat by Yale in 1916.

Haughton in his nine years as Harvard football coach has won seventy-one out of eighty-two games. Seven times has his team been beaten, and four times have tied games been played. Cornell, Carlisle, Princeton, Tufts, and Brown have won a game apiece, and Yale has captured two. Three of these defeats came in 1916 when Haughton was head coach, but Leo Leary, as field coach, had charge of the men until the former's baseball season was ended.

There appears to be no reason to believe that there will be any change in the relative positions on the football schedule of the Princeton and Yale games. In recent years the claim has been made that it was unfair to both these colleges that Harvard should meet the Blue after two weeks' rest from its contest with the Tigers, whereas the latter had to tackle Yale the week following its Harvard game, and the Elis in turn had to tackle the Crimson eleven with seven days' interim only after its hard battle with the Junglers.

Following the custom of previous years, the contest with Yale will probably be booked for Nov. 22, with the Princeton game two weeks before. As the last Harvard-Yale classic was staged in the Bowl, it is taken for granted that the Stadium will this year be the scene of the great football pageant. The Tiger team will be met at Princeton. If Coach Haughton is to coach the football team, he probably will have a great deal to say about prospective opponents for the Fall, or at least some member of the committee which makes up the schedule will have his views on the matter.

It is hard to speak with any degree of accuracy about the prospects for football practice next Spring. The only letter man from the 1916 squad now in Cambridge who will be eligible again is Winslow Felton, third string quarterback. Bill Snow, regular left guard, is at his studies, but will complete his course by June. Clark, a promising guard on the squad, is also here, and will be a strong candidate for a regular position in the Fall.

Billy Murray, second string quarterback, is an ensign with Admiral Jones' staff at Newport News, and expects to return next Fall. Eddie Casey, the star halfback, is an ensign in the transport service, and also hopes to re-enter college in September. Walter Wheeler, who resigned the 1918 captaincy, is eligible, but will probably not return. Ralph Horween is undecided, and Rufe Bond, who is studying for a naval commission, expects to return to college.

Arnold Horween, of the 1920 freshman team, is enrolled again, and should be a strong asset. He captained the 1917 Informal eleven. A number of 1917 freshmen, including Henry Faxen, Jim MacDonell, Arthur Hamilton, Dick Humphrey, Frank Lothrop, Jimmy King, Jabish Holmes, and the Stillman brothers, are all back in college, and will form the nucleus for Harvard football next season.

7,000 BIRDS ARE ENTERED.

Poultry Show Opens at Madison Square Garden Tuesday.

Madison Square Garden will resemble a mammoth barnyard Tuesday morning, when the thirtieth annual show of the New York Poultry and Pigeon Association opens. There will be over 13,000 exhibits. About 7,000 of the entries are poultry or water fowl, and the remainder will be pigeons. The doors will be open to the public at 9 o'clock on Tuesday morning.

The entries are in excess of last year, and the presence of foreign buyers and of hundreds of beginners at poultry raising are both assured. A new feature will be the maintneance of an information booth by representatives of the American Poultry Association to answer queries from beginners at poultry raising.

Birds that have been in active service with the Army Signal Corps during the war, both at the military pigeonrise in this country and on the firing lines abroad, will be among the entries in the classes for record homers. August de Corte of Rosebank, S. I., who is the inventor of devices used by the army for carrying messenger pigeons and of coops used by the Government, will make a special display of his models and birds. During the show he will fly birds daily from the Garden with messages to his lofts on Staten Island and to the military lofts on Governors Island.

STARS FOR NAVAL TEAM.

Basket Ball Team is Made Up of Former College Players.

With an all-star five starting practice, the basket ball hopes of the U. S. Naval Auxiliary Reserve are now based on the squad of officers chosen on the basis of their previous experience. This quintet, which is to be selected from the several hundred officers now awaiting assignement to sea duty at the Detail Office at South and Whitehall Streets, is to berepresentative of the Naval Overseas Transport Service, which numbers not only those officers drawn from the former merchant marine, but also hundreds of college and business men.

Tom Thorpe of Columbia has offered to coach the five. Thorpe has been influential in securing the Columbia University basket ball court for his charges and will put them through practice drills three times a week until the actual start of their playing schedule.

Ensign Manville H. Evans, U. S. N. R. F., is managing the team under the instructions of Ensign Hoyne, who has been placed in charge of the athletic activities of all officers and men stationed at South and Whitehall Streets. Manager Evans has mapped out a basket ball season that will include practically every Eastern college which plays basket ball.

Chief among the gold-striped officers that report to Thorpe are the following: Gene Gillan, of Minnesota, All-Western guard; Frank Trainor, of Fordham, guard; Tom Cosgrove, of Columbia, centre; Derrill Hart, of Kansas College, forward; Herb Stewart, of Bronx Church House, guard; and Joe McMahon, of Fordham, forward.

Manager Evans has arranged two games with the Crescent Athletic Club for Jan. 21 and 31, and is now awaiting replies to his tentative schedule as sent to twenty-six colleges and universities.

TIGER SWIMMERS READY.

Princeton Has Strong Team with Return of Veterans.

PRINCETON, N. J., Jan. 18.—Princeton aquatic teams have so far progressed in their short training that Captain Johnson is almost prepared to announce his selection. All of last year's point winners are back, with the exception of Kanzanjian and Dane in the fancy dive. Anderson and Quay, however, both former members of the university team, are now in college and ably fill the vacant positions.

The swimming team feels keenly the loss of Frank Sullivan, who for years turned out aggregations which won the water polo championship for the Tigers. Captain Johnson is conducting the training of the men, and he will be one of the mainstays of the swimming team in the 50 and 100 yard dashes. Carl Georgi and Erd Harris will also compete in these events. The three swam together in the freshman relay team of a few years ago that established the university intercollegiate record, and last year they were the backbone of the 'Varsity team.

The 200-yard swim presents the greatest problem to the Tiger Captain, it having always been the weak point on the team. Of the candidates now out for this event Twitchell gives most promise. Dick Kinnard was a surt point winner last year in the plunge, and, with his presence on the team, little anxiety is felt in that direction.

Manager Prentise has very nearly completed the schedule for the season. A meet with Yale has been definitely settled, and arrangements are now under way for a meet with Penn. There will be no Intercollegiate League this year in the aquatic sport, the colleges being still undecided as to the athletic program they will pursue this year.

YOUNG TROTTERS IMPROVE.

Three-Year-Olds Develop as Derby Candidates.

For over a century the English breeders of race horses have been awarding the blue ribbon of the turf to the winners of the Derby. With them it is the supreme test of merit. Through early training and intense breeding the three-year-old trotter is rapidly becoming as good in his line as the runner in his at the same age, and it will not be many years before foals of that age will be taking the word in all the class events at the leading meetings. David Guy and Nella Dillen showed what they could do in that respect last year, while Peter Volo could have won any event for trotters at meetings where he appeared in 1914.

One of the first three-year-old races of which there is a record was trotted over the Union Course on Long Island, in which Rose of Washington, by Burr's Washington, defeated American Eagle, by Cassius M. Clay, in 2:54. She also proved a good trotter in her day, Warren Peabody giving her a saddle record of 2:30 when she defeated Tacony in 1857, while Hiram Woodruff also gave her a harness record of 2:30¾ in a race which she won from Flora Temple the same season.

The next three-year-old race of note was trotted at Lexington, Ky., in 1859. The race was won by Kentucky Chief in 2:52, with Maid of Ashland second. Kentucky Chief also won again in 2:50½ at Louisville, where he distanced Ole Bull and Maid of Ashland. An injury, while being shipped at Rochester, N. Y., in 1870, was all that prevented this mare, whose name was changed to Lady Thorne, from becoming the champion of the turf. When she made her record of 2:18¼ in 1869, she trotted three heats in 2:19¾, 2:18¼ and 2:21, the best on record up to that date, and the week she was injured she won a third heat in 2:21¾, the last half of the mile being trotted in 1:06.

The next change in the three-year-old record was also made at Louisville in 1860, when Cora, by Strader's Cassius M. Clay, Jr., defeated Elvira Whiteside in 2:37¾. She trained on to a record of 2:30¾. Blackwood was the next record maker, and the mile which he trotted in 2:31 at Lexington, Ky., Oct. 2, 1860, was a very profitable one for his trainer and owner. Andrew Steel gave G. H. Buford a half interest if he would train and develop him. With about four months' work he gave the colt a record of 2:31, after which Steel purchased Buford's interest for $12,500 and sold Blackwood to Harrison Durkee of New York for $30,000.

Leland Stanford, the founder of Palo Alto, owned Elaine, another three-year-old champion. He purchased her at Stony Ford in the Spring of 1877, when he selected her half brother, Electioneer, to place at the head of his stud. John Murphy drove her to a record of 2:28 that Fall at Hartford, where she defeated Star Duroc and Effie.

The struggle for the three-year-old honors of the trotting turf between the Wilkes and Electioneer families began in 1881 and has continued to date, the only skips being in 1885, when Pancoast divided the honors with Electioneer, and in 1914 when Peter the Great led both of them. Phil Thompson was the first standard bearer of the Wilkes family. He placed the limit at 2:21 at Chicago, where, in a race for four-year-olds and under, he defeated Director, Clemmie G., Mamie, and Tucker. His record remained unbeaten until the Fall of 1883, when Marvin appeared at Lexington with Hinda Rose and distanced Wilkes Boy and Fugue in 2:19½. This was like bringing coal to Newcastle, and the Kentucky breeders felt that their reputation was tarnished until Patron equalled the performance over the same course in 1885.

The names of the balance of the three-year-old champions are familiar to modern racegoers. Sable Wilkes was the next in line, the honors going to him with a mile in 2:18. He was succeeded by Axtell, who cut the record to 2:12, only to give way the following month to Sunol, when she trotted in 2:10½. Marvin equalled this mark with Arion, in 1892 at Nashville, Tenn., where Geers also marked Fantasy, the next champion, when he won a $5,000 race with her the following year in 2:08¾.

This record remained at the top of the list until 1907, when Harry Stinson, whose father developed Patron, equalled it with Kentucky Todd at Columbus. The next change was made at Lexington, where General Watts, after winning the Kentucky Futurity, defeated Bisa and Bonnie Way in 2:06¾ in the Kentucky Stake. This performance restored the supremacy to the Wilkes family, and Colorado E. strengthened the position by shoving the limit down to 2:04¾ in 1910.

The record remained at this point for four years, when Peter Volo, after equalling it in a race at Kalamazoo, won the third race of his Kentucky Futurity in 2:03½. Murphy drove him, while he also had the mount behind The Real Lady when the Moko filly made the present record of 2:03, three weeks after Miss Bertha Dillon equalled Peter Volo's record in a race at Columbus.

SCHEDULE IS REVISED.

Columbia Sets New Dates to Meet Yale and Penn on Court.

Two revisions have been made in the schedule of the Columbia basketball team, which was announced tentatively several days ago. The changes are made in the dates of the games with Yale and Pennsylvania in the latter part of the season. Under the first schedule Columbia was to have played Yale in New York on Feb. 25 and Pennsylvania in Philadelphia on March 1, the Saturday night following.

Under the new arrangement, the games will be transposed. Columbia will go to Philadelphia on Feb. 25 for its game with the Red and Blue, and on March 1 will play Yale in New York.

LE GROS WINS LONG MATCH FROM KEYES

Junior Players at Net Nearly Three Hours at Opening of 7th Regiment Tourney.

CECIL DONALDSON BEATEN

Holder of Canadian Junior Title Goes Down Before Steady Game of Young Bassford.

Junior players furnished lively matches at the opening day's play of the indoor tennis championship for the regimental title at the Seventh Regiment Armory. Although the light on the courts was bad, several of the youngsters played at top speed and gave sterling exhibitions of the game on board floors.

Abraham Bassford, 3d, of the Scarsdale High School, defeated Gerald Donaldson, the youngster who won the Canadian jnior title last summer, in a hard fought match at 6—3, 8—6.

In another match in which the juniors figured, Teddy LeGros was busy for the greater part of the afternoon in bringing about the defeat of J. D. Keyes in an exciting three set match at 6—3, 8—10, 8—6.

Several of the older stars of the regiment did not play their schedule games because of the poor light. At times during the matches which were played, it was impossible for the spectators to see the ball from the sidelines and it is a mystery how the junior lads were able to play such fast tennis under the adverse conditions.

Walter Merrill Hall, who is one of the ten ranking players of the country, and who won the regimental title last season, was paired in the draw with Arthur S. Cragin, and although these two played several practice games, they decided to wait for better light next Saturday before tackling their tournament match.

During the practice these two at times played pretty fast tennis and drove the ball so swiftly that it was impossible for them to follow it in the dull gray shadows of the big drill shed. The champion and his opponent seemed to be very evenly matched, for when they stopped they had just completed a 30 game set, the score being 16—14 in Hall's favor.

The La Gros-Keyes match took up nearly three hours of playing time. La Gros got away to a good start and captured the first set at 6—3. Keyes, however, rallied in the next set, and he repeatedly pulled games out of the fire after the score had gone to deuce. The set was deadlocked several times, also, and it wasn't until after eighteen games had been played that Keyes came through a winner at 10—8. Keyes's play in this part of the match brought cut pretty volleying, and he fooled his opponent with several nicely placed shots along the side lines. La Gros tried continually to beat his opponent with hard drives, but Keyes surprised him with spectacular returns.

With a set to the credit of each player, they went into the third, hammer and tongs. The light was getting weaker all the time but this had little effect on the speed of the youngsters. After Keyes had rallied again and brought the match to deuce, La Gros got back to his best form and with his twist serve working in splendid form, won at 8—6.

Young Bassford took the first set of his match with Donaldson at 6—3 and expected to have just as easy a time in the second set. A surprise awaited him, however, and Donaldson settled down to his most aggressive form. He whizzed over several swift service aces during this set but Bassford, relying on his base line game won out at 8—6. Play in the tournament will be resumed next Saturday afternoon.

The summary:

Seventh Regiment Championship Singles.—Second Round (First Round Byes)—Abraham Bassford, 3d, defeated Gerald Donaldson, 6—3, 8—6; Teddy La Gros defeated J. D. Keyes, 6—3, 8—10, 8—6; Samuel A. McAlister defeated J. A. Anderson, 6—0, 6—1. Seventh Regiment Championship Class B Singles.—Second Round (First Round Byes)—H. Moore, Jr., defeated C. Klanberg, 6—0, 6—2; F. C. Beers defeated C. M. Ammerman, default.

TO AID OLYMPIC MEET.

K. of C. Athletic Directors to Train Soldier Athletes.

Announcement that the American Expeditionary Force will conduct a mammoth Olympic in Paris in May or June with contestants from all allied fighting forces, and that General Pershing had invited the allied armies to take part in the contests, has excited keen interest in this country, coming so soon after the official announcement that the Knights of Columbus had been placed in sole charge of all boxing contests and tournaments for the American Expeditionary Force.

The Knights of Columbus, through its overseas organization, is in a position to extend substantial aid to American soldiers desiring to compete n the proposed Olympic games, and will take up the work of getting the American soldiers ready to take part in the forth-coming contests.

Amongst the Knights of Columbus overseas secretaries are scores of men recognized as foremost in athletics in the United States, as the following list shows:

In aquatics William J. Varley, winner of the world's title in double sculls, and Phil J. Cross, who, at Travers Island, defeated some of the world's best swimmers; George Lamothe of Buffalo will teach them how to use the broadsword and foils; Alex McLean of Boston will put them on the right track for endurance contests; Michael Duggan of Chicago will guide them in marksmen's competition; John C. Mackey, playground director for Chicago, can give them pointers in sprinting and long-distance events; Albert Murray of New York will show 'em how to throw the discus, and Jack McAuliffe can help them get into prime condition for any sore of an athletic contest. Others are Jake Carey, Rochester; Jimmy Twyford, Brooklyn; Bill Friel, Columbus, Ohio; Eddie Behan, Philadelphia; Sam Fitzpatrick, New York; Jim Fox, Allentown, Penn.; Bis Mackey, Jersey City; Bill Coughlin, Pittsburgh; Bill McCabe, Poughkeepsie; Tom Dowd, Boston; Danny Dun, Cleveland.

WILLIAMS LOSES BOYNTON.

Star Athlete Is Completing Course in Naval Aviation.

WILLIAMSTOWN, Jan. 18.—"Ben" Boynton, Williams's star all around athlete, has not returned to college and he will not be on hand to captain the 'Varsity baseball nine in the Spring. There is a possibility that he will resume his studies in the Fall, however.

Boynton elected to complete his course in naval aviation and win his "wings" before receiving his discharge from the service. He has finished the preliminary end of the training at the M. I. T. ground school and is now ready to take up the practical side of flying.

Hockey will be taken up in modified form at Williams this Winter, contrary to expectations. William G. Hegardt of Duluth, Minn., a veteran of three years on the Purple seven, has been named captain. He has three other veterans around which to build up a team.

LEONARD IS FAVORITE.

Arrangements Completed for Bout with Dundee Tomorrow Night.

Benny Leonard, world's lightweight champion, will enter the ring of the Newark Sportsmen's Club, in the First Regiment Armory, Newark, N. J., tomorrow night, a top-heavy favorite over Johnny Dundee, his Italian rival. The boxers have contracted for an eight-round session. Whether the contest will go this distance is one of the chief points of speculation. Admirers of Leonard are wagering that the titleholder will score a knockout, but there are plenty of Dundee enthusiasts who are confident the little Italian will stay the limit.

There is only the remotest of possibilities that Leonard will be in danger, for Dundee has never been known to display a knockout punch. Leonard has demonstrated his ability as a heavy hitter. It is problematical, however, if the champion can land with decisive effect on the dancing, prancing, leaping Italian.

This will be the first time since Leonard won the lightweight title from Freddie Welsh that he has opposed Dundee. Previously Leonard boxed Dundee four times, once in 1915 and three times in 1916. All these bouts were ten-round no-decision affairs, in which both boxers were alternately given popular decisions.

Leonard and Dundee have completed their training. Leonard has paid special attention to reducing his weight. It is asserted that the title-holder is no longer eligible to defend his championship at the legitimate poundage. Leonard and his manager, Billy Gibson, declare they will refute this allegation when Leonard weighs in, as required by the New Jersey law. The contest is at catchweights but the law would prohibit the match if either contestant has a weight advantage of more than ten pounds.

The management is taking precautionary measures to prevent congestion. It is planned to assign soldiers in uniform for police duty and to discourage disturbances.

The advance sale is more than $7,000, it is reported. The promoters are anticipating a capacity crowd. The seating facilities of the armory are arranged so as to accommodate a crowd of 11,000. Patsy Cline of Newark will referee.

The Armory A. A. of Jersey City will conduct its weekly show in opposition to the Newark attraction tomorrow night. Two eight-round bouts have been arranged in addition to a number of six-round engagements. In the principal contest Jack Denley and Johnny Clinton will be opponents. The other eight-round match will bring together Charley Beecher, former amateur, and Willie Brown.

Boxing followers in this State are enthused with the favorable news coming from Albany for the restoration of legalised boxing. The sport has gained many friends and added popularity through the war. Admirers of the game are hopeful that the movement will receive the necessary support from the lawmakers. The incorporation of the Army, Navy and Civilian Board of Boxing Control at the office of the Secretary of State, in Albany, marks a favorable step toward a revival of the sport here.

Young Brown, a local boxer, will oppose Lew Tendler, the crack Philadelphia lightweight, in a bout of six rounds tomorrow night at the Olympia A. A. of Philadelphia.

Officials of the Boxers' Loyalty League are performing a commendable work to alleviate the monotony in the life of the wounded soldiers convalescing in local hospitals. This league was organized some time ago for the purpose of promoting boxing shows at the various local base hospitals. The sport is popular with the returned wounded heroes and there have been heavy demands on the officials for entertainments.

Battling Ortega of San Francisco, who held his own in a bout against Ted Kid Lewis, welterweight champion, will probably soon be matched for a bout with Tommy Robson, of Malden, Mass. The officials of the Armory A. A. of Boston are endeavoring to arrange the match for their club Feb. 4.

Ted Kid Lewis, welterweight champion, and Soldier Bartfield of Brooklyn, will engage in a return bout Tuesday night at the Armory A. A. of Boston. The match will be for twelve rounds to a decision.

PRAISE FOR MILLROSE A. A.

Dr. Raycroft Sends Letter of Commendation to Secretary McGowan.

John J. McGowan, Secretary-Treasurer of the Millrose A. A., has made public a letter received from Dr. Joseph E. Raycroft, Chairman of the Athletic Division, War Department's Commission on Training Camp Activities. In the communication Dr. Raycroft, speaking officially for the commission as well as for himself, expressed appreciation to McGowan and the Millrose A. A. for the financial and moral assistance the organization had rendered in the commission's work for the soldiers and sailors.

Dr. Raycroft wrote that the high morale and standard of physical efficiency which the armies of this nation attained were due directly to the stimulating influence of the athletic activities conducted in camps here and abroad. In his letter Dr. Raycroft said:

"The Government during the latter months of the war supported athletic work with very generous appropriations. In the beginning, however, we were forced to appeal to men like yourself to come to the assistance of the commission with money raised in various ways, and from various sources, for the purchase of athletic equipment to make it possible to carry out the program in the camps which the commission had planned. Your assistance in this work had a double value—we used your money and we were very greatly encouraged by your backing and support."

NOT THE SPORT OF KINGS.

Major Belmont Says Racing Is Now Sport for the People.

Horse racing, referred to from time immemorial as the sport of kings, has outlived that reference and must in future be recognized as a sport for the people. This declaration was made by Major August Belmont, Chairman of The Jockey Club, who recently returned from battle-scarred Europe.

Major Belmont is more than ever convinced of the necessity of racing as an essential in the improvement of the horse product of the country, as a result of his observation in the war area of Europe. The Jockey Club leader found the keenest interest manifested in the thoroughbred in France and England, and looks for a renewal of racing abroad on something of the same scale as prevailed before the war.

"Everybody abroad concedes the all-important part cavalry played at decisive moments in the great struggle," said Major Belmont. "The thoroughbred is the prime factor in the production of this type, and no less an authority than Sir Douglas Haig, the British Commander in Chief, himself a cavalryman and a sincere lover of the horse, whose charger is the thoroughbred Croesus, has indorsed the wisdom of breeding horses for the two military virtues of hardiness and activity. He is on record as expressing the opinion 'that the best animals for army purposes are also the most valuable for agriculture, commerce, and sport.'"

Stocks Display Further Weakness Under Light Selling—Bank Loans Gain.

The selling pressure against stocks which came into sight on Friday was continued yesterday, resulting in net declines among industrial issues extending from 1 to 2 points and more. Mexican Petroleum was offered down in good-sized lots for a loss of more than 6½ points, and the steel shares again were prominent targets for bearish attack. Steel common at 90 closed at the lowest level since last April. The market displayed little rallying power and left off at or close to the lowest quotations in case of issues most actively dealt in.

The weakness of prices during the last two sessions of the week failed to bring into light any definite and comprehensive explanation, although a summary of conditions reported in industry and trade was more favorable to sales than purchases of stocks for speculation. The steel industry, while moderately active in some departments, contains many mills whose activity is lessening, with a consequent increase of unemployment. The textile trades are experiencing price reductions as efforts are made to find a level where buying will be stimulated. The week brought only small progress toward a solution of the railroad future, and it may be that the security market, through the decline of stocks, registered a renewal of uncertain sentiment in respect to the time which must elapse before manufacturing, distribution, and control of transportation by rail reach a true and normal peace basis. For several weeks there had been almost a deadlock in the stock market, and the decline quite possibly brought a measure of relief to market followers who had grown impatient of the backing and filling process, irrespective of their attitude toward price movements. Whether the downward dip actually reflected economic events of importance may be determined only through further examination of quotations later on.

The Clearing House bank statement showed an increase of $44,718,000 in loans, which may have reflected in part the financing of new security offerings during the week. The stock market made no extensive demands on bank credit. Surplus reserve expanded $8,028,000, a total almost exactly equal to the increase of reserve credits with the Federal Reserve Bank. The Federal Reserve Bank's weekly report indicated that the call of customers upon member banks for accommodation was met without need for substantial discounting of paper at the Government institution. Rediscounts based on United States Government obligations declined $75,500,000, and those of commercial paper were $5,706,000 less than the week before. The bank's gold reserve receded $28,706,000, compared with a decline of $69,000,000 in the preceding week.

ODD-LOT SALES INCREASE.

Review of the Week Shows Fewer Buyers Than Sellers.

Discussing the trading in odd lots in the local stock market during the past week, The Odd Lot Review said:

"There has been a definite balance of selling over buying. Last week the number of buyers exceeded the number of sellers to the extent of 9 per cent. This week the balance swung around the other way and the number of sellers exceeded the number of buyers by about 3 per cent.

"It cannot be said, however, that an excess of 3 per cent. on the selling side is in itself indicative of any considerable degree of liquidation, present or prospective. The odd-lot market is simply awaiting general development, and is sympathetically reacting to the uncertain general market conditions."

CUBA CANE SUGAR BONDS.

Directors of the Cuba Cane Sugar Corporation have decided to call a meeting of the stockholders to authorize an issue of mortgage bonds. The corporation, the largest manufacturer of raw sugar in the world, has no funded debt. During the last three years it has spent more than $25,000,000 for new properties. While no definite arrangement has been made as to the bond issue, it is believed that it will equal in amount the purchase price of the acquired property.

A Director of the company said yesterday that as the price of raw sugar had been substantially increased and the peak of the company's expenses apparently reached, it was expected that with its large production the concern would have a prosperous year.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Russian 6½s Advance.

Strength in the Imperial Russian Government 6½ per cent. external bonds was manifest in yesterday's trading, the close being at 58, an advance of 3½ points over the last sale of Saturday. These bonds hold possibilities which have attracted speculators. The interest has been paid with regularity at the National City Bank and with the issue maturing on June 18 the question has been raised as to whether the $50,000,000 represented will be paid off in cash at that time. After Russian affairs became chaotic there was little disposition to consider the bonds with much favor. It is now being argued by some that as long as interest has been paid this fact may be taken as a favorable augury for the actual retirement of the issue on a cash basis. This factor has undoubtedly contributed to the rise. A bond selling at 58, which might be retired at par within six months, holds a margin of profit which would be highly alluring did it not seem on its face to be almost beyond the realm of possibility.

Selling of Steel Common.

What appeared to be liquidation of a 10,000 share lot of United States Steel appeared on the ticker just before the close of yesterday's session. This heavy selling which forced the price down to 90, the lowest that has been touched since last Spring, was especially noticeable because of the dullness of the market generally. The transactions appeared almost consecutively, there being interspersed only one or two 100-share lots, and all were recorded in the last ten minutes. The first of the big sales were 1,100 shares at 90¼; then followed 1,200 at the same price, 5,500 at 90, which ruled for the next sales of 1,000, and 1,200 shares.

Inconsistencies.

While the action of the stock market indicates apparently a lack of confidence in the immediate future, the decline having been augmented by talk of labor difficulties and reconstruction problems, there are other tendencies which seem to indicate a diametrically opposite point of view. Foreign trade is considered in both industrial and banking quarters to be something on which the country will have a substantial grasp and the expansion of banking affiliations with foreign countries, the release of shipping, and the establishment of export companies on every hand to represent American industry throughout the world, would seem to presume that the outlook was not entirely one of gloom. Industry apparently has more confidence in the future than investors have in the securities of the companies. Whichever may be right only the passing of time can tell, but it is certainly a cause for satisfaction that in the transition period all of the forces of the country are not imbued with pessimism.

Indigestion.

Bond specialists report that the market is apparently suffering from indigestion and there have been frequent predictions in the last few days that there would be no great amount of activity until after the Fifth Liberty Loan has been floated. One of the recent attractive bond offerings is now changing hands at less than the offering price, and the general sentiment seems to be that the market has absorbed about as much in the way of long-term issues as it desires. The savings banks have paid their interest and are now in position to know what they will invest, and there have been inquiries and some substantial purchases from this source of Liberty bonds and of the standard railroad issues. A considerable amount of financing remains to be accomplished before the next Government loan, but it is not generally considered probable that there will be extensive offerings of long-time securities in the interim.

American Smelters.

Uncertainty regarding the action of Directors of the American Smelting and Refining Company, when they meet on Feb. 5, on the common dividend plus the general depression yesterday following the decline of prices in Friday's stock market, served to depress the common stock in the half-holiday session. The report of the company for the six months ended June of last year disclosed a surplus after common dividends of $113,872, against $5,166,671 in the corresponding period in 1917. In some quarters it was suggested that the Directors may base their action regarding the common stock on last year's earnings despite good cash holdings. The stock opened yesterday at 72⅛ and sold off to 71 at the close.

Selling Pressure Continued.

Several of the issues on the general list reacted yesterday to continued selling pressure. Mexican Petroleum, which opened at 174½, sold off to 167½, with slight recoveries in the last hour, until just before the close, when further offerings depressed the price to that figure, which was the closing quotation. Baldwin Locomotive felt the weight of stock offerings and dropped to 68¾, but recovered a part of this loss to 69½ at the close. United States Rubber, Texas Company, and Pan American Petroleum were also weak.

Increased Costs.

The United Cigar Stores Company has distributed leaflets to its various stores which carry a statement of cost increases in 1918, compared with pre-war costs. The figures were prepared from the cost sheets of ten large manufacturers and include the following:

	P. C.
Labor—
Wages of cigar makers, strippers, packers, and other factory labor	50
Leaf tobacco—
Fillers, domestic	100
Fillers, imported	108
Binders	130
Wrappers, domestic	133
Wrappers, Sumatra type	37
Internal Revenue—
Average increase in differential tax, calculated under present schedule on 1,000 cigars of various classifications	133

The leaflet states also that the available supply of leaf tobacco from which cigars are made is depleted, and no reduction of price is promised in the immediate future.

Rubber Substitutes in Norway.

A company in Christiania, Norway, has acquired the sole right for Scandinavia for manufacturing a rubber substitute from raw materials found in that country, says Commercial Attaché Erwin W. Thompson, Copenhagen, Denmark. It is said that this has been tried for many years, and is expected to be of great importance to Scandinavian rubber consumers, as it costs not more than a fraction of the price of real rubber. The company was originally started with a capital of $134,000, and this is now being increased to $576,000.

Canners Association to Meet.

DISCUSSES RAILROAD PLANS

Immediate Consideration Demanded, Says Wollman & Co.'s Review.

In a discussion of the railroad situation, W. J. Wollman & Co., in their biweekly review, while admitting that the problem appears as far from solution as ever, maintain that the attention being centered upon the questions involved will be ultimately beneficial.

"We probably shall be able to arrive at a settlement," the review says, "through the process of elimination. Public sentiment, as well as expert opinion appears to have rejected the two extremes of the proposition—Government ownership on the one hand, and the old form of control on the other. Moreover, there is no general disposition to accept the proposal that the roads be definitely turned over to the Government for a period of five years in order to permit theleisurely working out of an acceptable plan.

"Popular sentiment, as well as public necessity, calls for immediate consideration of the question. There is no virtue in postponement. The amount of time consumed in earnest deliberation is another matter. The completion of particular details may take two years or longer; it may take less. By keeping persistently on the job, without temptation to procrastinate, by giving consideration to the problem whilep ublic intelligence is keenly aroused, we shall be much more likely to arrive at a speedy, fair and equitable solution.

"The principal of Federal incorpation should be included in the general plan. This is essential for the purpose of removing our entire transportation question from harassing and conflicting interfernece by the different States. Any one familiar with the intricate maze of requirements demanded by different State commissions is in a position to appreciate the burdens imposed on every department of railroad administration.

"In the mere matter of State taxes alone th erailroads have been forced to carry imposts that not only have injured them financially but also have indicated a purpose to force them to furnish an undue proportion of State revenue. The table below gives the figures on seven States representing every section of the United States, with revenue derived from the railroads, from real estate, total State revenue (not including municipal) and percentage of State revenue furnished by the railroads. The figures are for 1916.

	Taxation from Railroads.	Revenue from Real Estate.	Total Revenue.	Prop. Paid by R.R.'s P.C.
Kan.	$4,107,564	$3,605,780	$11,072,308	37.9
N. J.	7,655,741	11,487,198	20,370,655	37.5
Wash.	4,063,897	7,218,942	12,476,533	33.4
Minn.	6,444,706	7,109,811	23,851,472	27.0
La.	2,234,016	3,668,894	9,431,784	33.4
Mich.	4,219,625	14,672,958	20,020,261	20.0
Cal.	5,141,629	not avail.	49,879,988	10.3

"These figures are interesting chiefly in their reflection of political and official attitude, as well as public ignorance and apathy. The average person, if he would but stop and think, has practically as vital an interest in a sound and just solution of the railroad problem as the executive of a transcontinental system or a security holder. In addition to his dependence upon adequate service at a reasonable cost, to say nothing of the effect upon the country's general welfare, through healthy transportation conditions, the average citizen has a direct financial interest in seeing the railroads prosper. If he is a working man with a savings deposit, he should realize that the integrity of his principal, as well as the rate of interest, is dependent upon the securities held by his bank, and many of these will be found to be railroad bonds. If he invests a portion of his yearly income in a life insurance policy for the protection of his family, he should realize that the solidity of the insurance company depends, as a result of its holdings of railroad securities, on a fair treatment of the railroads."

AMERICAN AID FOR EUROPE.

Bankers Going Abroad to Study Needs and How to Meet Them.

Many representatives of American banking interests either have sailed or are about to sail for Europe for personal conferences with bankers as to the needs of foreign countries during the reconstruction period, and the possibilities for extending American banking affiliations. This country, having become a heavy creditor nation, means the absorption here of large amounts of foreign securities.

John J. Arnold, Vice President and head of the Foreign Department of the First National Bank of Chicago, speaking of a trip which he is about to take to Europe, is quoted as saying:

"The bankers are undertaking a vast task. We hope a preliminary peace treaty will be signed soon, and when that is done many barriers to active work will be lifted and we can start our operations. I personally shall visit all of the countries of Europe. We have two fundamental tasks; to lay the foundation for financing the rehabilitation of the war wrecked cities and towns in allied territory and to restore bank connections with countries where they have been broken off by the war, and to form new connections where needed. This work will probably require three or four months.

"In devastated regions our energies will be chiefly devoted to arranging for financing the restoration of public utilities and to investigate and report on industrial needs as well."

FINANCIAL NOTICE. FINANCIAL NOTICE.

CANADA'S TRADE POSITION

Striking Figures Given By the President of the Canadian Bank of Commerce.

The trade and financial situation of Canada in the last year of the great War was reviewed by Sir Edmund Walker, President of The Canadian Bank of Commerce in his address to the shareholders a few days ago in Toronto. Some of the figures given were certainly striking in view of the small population of our northern neighbour and the fact that she has been an active participant in the War for over four years.

Sir Edmund says:

The war is over and we are struggling with the terms which we intend to impose on Germany. One turn of the kaleidoscope has changed the aspect of almost everything in our daily life and in our mental horizon. Only yesterday we were bending every faculty as a nation and as individuals to the thousand different kinds of effort necessary to win the war. We had completely disrupted the co-operation of individuals in the various pursuits of life which are necessary to the happiness of society in times of peace, and men and women were drawn either into military and munition work, or into the production of food, almost to the limit of our powers. Now the work in munition factories has stopped, our armies will return, and from 500,000 to 600,000 men and women, an enormous proportion of our small population, will have to find new kinds of employment. The enlistment of soldiers, and the withdrawal of others from peaceful occupations to the making of munitions, took four years to reach a climax, but the reverse process comes upon us in an instant. We shall in the end have work for all, but much that could have been started at once in spring or summer is impossible in winter. The troops will come home gradually, and as six months' pay is to be given to some of them, and smaller allowances to others, our anxiety regarding them is partly removed. The munition workers, however, cannot be shifted to new employment fast enough to prevent there being a considerable number out of work during this winter.

In order to appreciate the scale of industrial events we turn as usual to the figures of our foreign trade. Disregarding coin and bullion, which have fallen to inconsiderable figures, the excess of exports, for the fiscal year ending 31st March, amounted to $623,647,000. The excess for the two previous years, large as it was when compared with the past, was $563,795,000, or considerably less than for the one year under consideration. Our total foreign trade was $2,548,691,000, as against a total of $1,129,616,000 in the year ending 31st March, 1914.

The field crops of Canada for 1918, the figures of the last month being only an estimate, are valued at $1,383,000,000, as against $1,145,000,000 for 1917, the actual value that year being larger than the estimate. The total production from our mines is estimated at $220,000,000, as compared with $189,646,000 in 1917 and $177,201,000 in 1916.

Such a surplus of exports over imports as $623,000,000 would, if we were paid in international money, make us financially rich beyond imagination and it would put New York exchange, the real test of our international position, at a discount. As a matter of fact New York exchange has lately been at a high premium, because with all our exports we cannot command enough international money to keep the balance even. At the moment, because of transportation difficulties, we are carrying a very large amount of wheat sold to the British Government. If in settlement we received even a moderate payment in cash we could keep the rate for New York exchange fairly low, but there is no assurance that any part of what is due will be paid in money useful for international settlements. We have pointed out before the extent to which we make purchases from the United States which must be settled in cash, and for which, directly or indirectly, we receive from Great Britain only long-term obligations. This year conditions are not improved, despite large orders for munitions given by the United States to Canada. Comparing the year ending 31st March, 1918, with the previous one, we imported from the United States goods to the value of $792,000,000, as against $678,000,000, and we exported to them $418,000,000, as against $290,000,000, so that we owed them on balance $374,000,000 instead of $388,000,000. During the six months ending September, 1918, matters did not improve; the scale of imports and exports was larger, but the resulting difference against us was proportionately about the same.

In November, 1917, the first Victory Loan (the fourth Canadian War Loan) was offered. The sum asked was $150,000,000, and 875,000 people subscribed $421,000,000. The figures we quoted a year ago were largely exceeded when the returns were completed. This issue was made at 98.67, and if it had followed the fate of most war loans, it would have declined in price somewhat before the next loan appeared, but the organization which made the issue so successful took care of the market so well that, while a very considerable percentage of the loan was turned over from day to day, the issue price was not merely maintained but was raised to par by July, 1918. As a consequence, when the second Victory Loan came out in October last, the Finance Minister was able to make the issue price par with accrued interest. The latest figures for this loan show that, while $300,000,000 was asked, 1,080,000 people have subscribed for $690,000,000. We were very proud that the subscriptions to the loan of 1917 reached a total of $53.37 per head of our population, but the amount subscribed to the 1918 loan was $88.10 per head. Not only are both of our huge Victory Loans at a premium, but the general course of our bond market has shown a corresponding improvement. While it opened in 1918 at the lowest level of prices, and therefore at the highest yield in interest, that we have seen for years, it has improved so that the yield is now from one-quarter to one-half of one per cent. less than at the beginning of the year. Not only have we taken care of all new requirements, but we have paid off loans maturing in the United States to the amount of about $40,000,000. Now that the war is ended, we must expect large issues of provincial and municipal bonds and those should find a ready market either in Canada or in the United States.

The financial and trade situation in the latter country is very fully set forth by our New York agent and the history of American finance during the war is dealt with at length. It is difficult to realise that, in spite of their coming into the war so late, their industries were apparently almost as completely diverted to war purposes as those of other allied countries, the expansion in particular directions, and in foreign trade generally, being without example and beyond our imagination of what was possible. One or two items from his report give us some idea of the scale of their operations. The disbursements of the Government for the fiscal year ending June, 1918, were about $13,000,000,000, of which $4,738,000,000 were loans to allies. The estimated expenditure for the year ending June, 1919, was $24,000,000,000, but it is thought that in view of the armistice this will be reduced to $18,000,000,000. The total loans to allies in November last were stated to be $8,185,000,000. Nothing is more impressive than the fact that of these colossal expenditures one-third is raised by taxation. It has been frequently said that without the Federal Reserve System of banking the United States could probably not have financed the war without more or less collapse of her financial system. It is equally true that the System has permitted an expansion of credit which, notwithstanding the importation of over $1,000,000,000 in gold since the war began, has gone far enough to require a very conservative course for the immediate future.

This may be a good point at which to consider the position of Great Britain. The report of our London manager should be read by everyone who desires to realize the part that country has played in the war. Unprepared—except as to that navy which by blockading Germany really won the war—she raised a vast army which, like none of the other armies, fought in all the widely separated areas of the conflict. For two years, while we awaited the entry of the United States, she bore the heavy part of the whole war, lending money, supplying munitions, coal, food, sympathy and advice to her allies. In resourcefulness, invention, daring and unyielding courage, whether in the trenches, at sea, or especially in the air, she astonished her own children and she amazed that part of the world which has never understood her, unless it be now that the war is won. When the war began she had a debt of three and a half billions of dollars. If we deduct what she has lent to her allies, and certain other recoverable items, she will probably owe twenty-two billions of dollars at a rough estimate. From the first report of the Committee on Currency and Foreign Exchanges after the War, it is clear that the mind of the British banker is steadily bent not upon further possibilities of inflation, but upon recovering the gold position of Great Britain as soon as possible. The Bank of England has the largest quantity of gold in its history, but its ratio of reserve is low, and the new Government issues of £1 and 10-shilling notes have reached the large total of £293,790,000. Great Britain controls a large percentage of the new gold produced throughout the world, and in the scramble for gold which we shall doubtless see for many years to come, she will have the best position. In raising money for the prosecution of the war she has shown a wonderful confidence in her people, as to their power, as well as to their willingness, to provide whatever was necessary, week by week, and she has latterly avoided the large issues at particular moments which have so disturbed finance elsewhere. She at first alarmed some of us by the vast amount of Treasury Bills which she kept afloat, but later in 1917 she seemed to have "found herself," and sold National War Bonds and War Savings Certificates in a steady stream through banks and post offices, to a sufficient extent to meet her needs of £25,000,000 per week. What she was not able to pay was her indebtedness to the United States and Canada for munitions supplied, as this required international money, that is, gold or balances due by foreign countries. She had shipped to the United States, either directly or through other countries, over $1,000,000,000 in gold, as well as a large amount of securities, and had closed down her manufactures for export in order to produce munitions, and thus, after making huge loans to the allies, she began to require those outside loans which are now roughly estimated at about $5,000,000,000. Her loans to the allies are supposed to balance the loans she obtained abroad, and we need have little fear that she will not very soon re-establish her supremacy in the field of finance throughout the world, great as are the difficulties surrounding her position.

Sir Edmund Walker's bank has itself shared fully in the growth of Canada, having added $96,000,000 to its assets during the past year. We give a few extracts from the address of the General Manager, Sir John Aird, to the shareholders at the same meeting. Sir John Aird said:

The earnings of the Bank have been good, and the profits have again reached a new high level, amounting to $2,850,000, or $212,000 more than a year ago. We confess to a feeling of pride that we have been able to maintain the premier place among Canadian banks in this, to you, important item. Notwithstanding the apparent size of the figures, however, it must not be forgotten that the rate of earnings of this Bank, as of Canadian banks in general, is steadily decreasing, when measured by the services rendered and the extent of the effort put forth by our staff. On the average of our total assets during the year we have earned only 7-10ths of one per cent. as compared with 1.27 per cent. in 1913, the last year prior to the war, and 1.37 per cent. ten years ago. The main causes of this, as I have pointed out in previous years, are, on the one hand, the enormous increase in the volume of those banking services which are performed for the public without remuneration, and the fact that banking is one of the few businesses in which charges are sometimes lowered but seldom increased, in spite of the general increase in the cost of everything else; and on the other, the increases in salaries and wages which are inevitable to enable our men to meet the great increase in the cost of living. It must not be forgotten that salaries and wages constitute the most formidable item of expense in the budget of a bank, and it will readily be understood that the responsibilities and the difficulties of dealing fairly with the members of our staff, in view of the high level of the cost of living, are not small.

An unusual item in our Profit and Loss account this year, which affords us much gratification, is the recovery of the appropriation of $1,000,000 set aside in the year 1915 to provide for the depreciation of securities. We then expressed the hope of saving this, or at least a part of it, at the end of the war, and it is a source of satisfaction to find our prediction fulfilled. We have set aside $100,000 to defray the cost of a memorial we propose to raise in honour of the officers of the Bank who served in the great war, and for the cost of the history of the Bank to which I referred a year ago. The form of the memorial is not yet decided, but it will probably take shape when we come to erect a new building on our site here, an undertaking which cannot long be delayed if the natural development of the business of the Bank is not to be hindered by cramped and unsuitable quarters. After doing all this we have been able to transfer $1,500,000 to Rest account, which thus becomes equal to the paid-up capital, a goal which we have aimed to reach for many a day, but which has called for long years of tireless striving, before we could consider it as fairly won. We might perhaps have made a better showing on the surface and have seemed to reach our goal in a shorter period of time, but our wish has been to build surely and carefully upon a firm foundation, and in the meantime to provide beyond peradventure for every weak spot in our loans and securities. We carry forward into the new financial year an undivided balance of profits amounting to $1,444,842, or $112,000 more than a year ago. The increase in our total deposits is $76,733,000, or 27.7 per cent., and the greater part of this is under the heading of deposits not bearing interest, which account for $64,552,000. Deposits bearing interest show an increase of $12,181,000, an amount which would have been much greater had it not been for the Victory Loan of 1918.

Our efforts to assist the Minister of Finance in obtaining subscriptions to the Loan have resulted in our securing through this Bank the large sum of $104,543,000, represented by 150,773 individual subscriptions. This amount included $100,000,000 of new money and represents 15 per cent. of the total. It is gratifying to know that we have far exceeded the proportion which might be reasonably expected from us. This result has not been obtained without very strenuous efforts on the part of our staff, and also the expenditure of a large amount of money by the Bank. Unfortunately the heavy task came upon our staff just at the moment when their ranks were depleted by the ravages of influenza.

Cash on hand, consisting of gold and silver coin and Dominion notes, amounts to $61,971,000, as compared with $54,652,000 a year ago, an increase of $7,319,000. Of this we had $17,500,000 in the Central Gold Reserves, to provide cover for our excess note circulation. Call and short loans show an increase of $8,324,000, of which the greater part is in loans outside Canada, and immediately available assets are $35,682,000 greater, standing at about 50 per cent. of our liabilities to the public. Commercial loans show an increase of $52,621,000, nearly all of which is lent in Canada. Total assets have increased $95,935,000, and now amount to the very large sum of $440,310,000. This increase is 27.8 per cent. over the figures of last year, a remarkable showing when it is recalled that we have been marking time in the opening of new branches, and that we have not taken over the business of any other bank.

As to the future, we feel that we can look forward with quiet confidence. The multifarious restrictions which have necessarily been placed on business during the war will doubtless disappear before long, and they should be removed by the Government as speedily as possible. This will aid in lessening unemployment at home, and enable our exporters to resume their operations in other countries before the field is occupied. Attention should also be given to the prompt settlement of all outstanding contracts and obligations of the Government, and to the claims arising out of the cancellation of contracts. These are sometimes allowed to drag, causing great injustice to individuals and corporations, and preventing them from resuming their accustomed place in the peace activities of the nation. By prompt attention to such matters the Government can assist materially in the restoration of a normal state of affairs in the business world. We have been fortunate in this country in that our participation in the war has not involved material damage at home. Our efforts have entailed no exhaustion on our part, and while the problems before us are many and difficult, we believe that a satisfactory solution will be found for all of them.

PITTSBURGH, Jan. 18.—Local iron and steel circles have been discussing the prediction made a few days ago by J. Leonard Repogle, formerly Director of Steel Supply, that within sixty to ninety days there will be a boom in the iron and steel trade, and pig iron will go to $40 a ton, billets to $60, and heavy rolled steel products to $75 a net ton. The concensus of opinion is that the prediction is over optimistic, particularly with reference to the time limit mentioned, but also with respect to prices. As to the time limit, comment is made that Judge E. H. Gary's recent predictions of a period of five years of prosperity for the American steel industry carefully avoided setting a date for the beginning of the period. The common attitude of iron and steel producers is that there must be a period of readjustment, the length depending upon the speed with which readjustment proceeds and upon the amount of readjustment that is found necessary. With respect to prices, the view is practically universal that mosts in the iron and steel industry must come down. When they do it will be possible to sell at lower prices than those now ruling and still have comfortable earnings. In 1917 and 1918 the earnings were large, despite the heavy tax deductions necessary, particularly for 1918, and taxes will be lower for 1919 than they were last year.

There is a unanimity of opinion among iron and steel producers that no general reduction in wages should be attempted, either now or in the near future, despite the fact that daily earnings of the men are from two to two and a half times what they were before the war. There had been no general reduction in 1914, despite the depressed condition of the industry, and from 1899 to 1913, inclusive, there had been many advances with only two or three intermediate reductions.

What employers do seek, however, is a restoration of the labor performance of before the war. They expect men to render a standard day's service, and as there is now opportunity to make selections, the men who are willing to do a full day's work will receive the preference. Labor shortage disappeared before the close of the old year, and conditions have since been trending toward a surplus.

Cheaper raw materials also will have an influence in reducing manufacturing costs. Heavy melting steel scrap has been dropping sharply in the last few weeks, and purchases have lately been made at $20 a gross ton, delivered, the Government limit having been $29, upon which price dealers were allowed to charge a commission of 3½ per cent. in addition, making the cost to mill $30. Ferro manganese is also lower, makers quoting $225 against $250 formerly ruling, but there is no demand at $225, and still lower prices will doubtless develop in time. These market declines do not at once affect steel producers, as they are using supplies bought at higher prices.

Operating at 75 Per Cent. of Capacity.

Some estimates made in authoritative quarters place the rate of steel mill operations at as low as 60 per cent, but such estimates are not general, some observers placing the percentage at nearer 75 per cent. All testimony agrees, however, that the rate of operation is decreasing, and will probably continue to decrease until Spring demand makes a change in the situation. None of the steel mills have closed entirely, the decrease in tonnage being made by closing individual departments or portions of batteries of open-hearth furnaces.

The gathering of pig iron producers from all over the country in Pittsburgh this week developed an almost unanimous opinion that in the far future pig iron prices will be lower than present quotations, although no decline in the next few months is definitely expected. The furnace men maintain that no pig iron should be made that cannot be shipped. Piling iron at present high production costs is considered out of the question. When the revival in demand comes, therefore, there will be no slack to be taken up.

Iron and steel exports in November are reported at 448,716 gross tons, against 388,777 tons in October, and 513,029 tons in November of 1917. There is much export inquiry at the present time, but the closing of business is interferred with by the high ocean freights ruling, and the orders are going largely to Great Britain. The rate from New York to China and Japan is $45 a ton, to the Dutch East Indies $60, and to Australia and New Zealand $40. Rates from Great Britain are much lower. The United States Shipping Board rate on pig iron from New York to Rio Janeiro is $25 a ton. The high ocean rates from the United States are offset to a slight extent by the lower prices quoted f. o. b., as compared with the British export prices, but not by enough to develop business on any large scale.

Dealers in scrap are still engaged in their effort to arouse interest on the part of consumers. For several weeks the operation has consisted of offering material at successively low prices, and when this did not draw them bids have been solicited, but to no avail. Dealers complain that there must be some price at which scrap is regarded as a purchase.

The Emergency Fleet Corporation is getting the chief amount of plate tonnage being rolled at present. Indeed, most of the mills say this is the heaviest end of their plate business at this time, and judging from the amount being rolled the Fleet Corporation's requirements must have suffered very little diminution from those of last Summer, when the mills were required to work on a schedule calling for a total of 50,000 net tons of plates a week for account of the corporation. A fair run of rollings exists on plates for freight cars, against old orders, which are being filled at a more rapid rate than before the war ended, as the activities of the car shops in shell making and other war business have greatly decreased, and the shops can devote more attention to cars.

No Price Cutting Yet.

No one can tell anything about the general question of what will become of all the plate rolling capacity, the proportion of plate capacity to that for the production of other descriptions of finished steel being abnormally high on account of the various plate mills built in the last couple of years. Plate prices are being strictly maintained on the basis of 3.00c with regular extras, this covering all sheared plates and being understood to cover universal mill plates as well, while universal mill skelp is 2.90c, having been reduced $5 a ton from the Government price of 3.15c on universal skelp.

Price cutting on any of the finished steel products has not developed, and there is no indication that it will in the near future. Producers appear to be adhering strictly to recognized market levels. Considerable confidence is expressed by sellers that if there were any weakness in the market they would learn of it very promptly. It is an established fact that in the steel trade price cutting cannot be done seriously. Steel producers do not feel that the market is giving any particular exhibition of strength by its staying strictly at recognized figures. All sellers are a unit in declaring that there is no incentive to cut prices; indeed, the feeling is the other way altogether.

There is quite a tonnage of unfilled business on books, against which there is a fair volume of shipments, fully as heavy as could be expected in the circumstances, and the common view is that if producer gained one ton of new business by cutting prices he would in the long run loose ten tons of business already on books. This feeling will exist as long as buyers continue seeking material only for immediate use, with no revival in demand for steel for regular construction purposes.

There has been a decided improvement in tinplate specifications this week, and the market is expected to broaden from week to week. Mills are making up practically no stock, and are operating in accordance with specifications received. As a result operations have averaged a trifle under 50 per cent. of capacity in the last four weeks, and this week they were not over 50 per cent. Tinplate consumption during the coming year will be heavy.

Export Prospects Are Poor.

Export prospects continue poor on account of the ocean freight situation. Some export sales were made at $7.35 a base box, 100 pounds, which is the usual asking price on export business, while it is the regular domestic market. The price report on tinplate shipped in November and December, made in connection with the bi-monthly adjustment in wages, showed $7.85, the same as in the preceding bi-monthly period. For this and next month toonage wage rates will therefore continue at 87 per cent. above the basic rates in the scale. The basis rates obtain with the tinplate at $3.50, advancing or declining 1 per cent. for each 5 cents a box in realized prices, except that below $3.20 tinplate there is no further wage decline. Thus wages can go 6 per cent. below the basis rates. The present wages are 99 per cent. above the possible minimum provided by the scale.

The most active of the various branches of the iron and steel trade is the sheet industry, a few of the independent mills operating at 86 per cent. of capacity or more, the average operation of the whole industry being estimated at about 75 per cent. There continues to be a heavy demand from the automobile trade, and a moderate demand from most other consuming lines. Prices of blue annealed, black and galvanized sheets are firmly maintained, at 3.90c., 4.70c., and 6.05c., respectively.

The mills have no incentive to cut, as specifying is encouraged by strict maintenance of prices. Shipments under old contracts, at Government prices or higher, have been adjusted to the new market, and this has been done quite irrespective of the binding form of contract adopted a couple of years ago by the independent sheet makers. While adjustments have been made by the mills with their customers to the reduced market level, it appears that they did not make adjustments to any extent, if at all, on shipments prior to Jan. 1, as the wage settlement made last week showed 5.25c. for the average price of 26, 27, and 28 gauge shipped during November and December, this comparing with an average of 5c. in the bi-monthly period preceding. Evidently the mills had some high-priced business on books, taken prior to Government price-fixing, on which they were able to make shipments for a time.

While it is felt that the Government must have a large quantity of unfinished steel to be disposed of, it is evidently awaiting a market of more absorbing power than that now existing before it offers the steel in any quantities. Cancelation of war contracts has thrown a lot of the commodity in the Government's hands, and the trade is awaiting with interest the disposition to be ordered by the authorities.

The British Government is more disposed to close up its affairs here and has been offering shell steel very freely, and of course at what appear to be low prices compared with the quotable market on soft steel in unfinished form, as well as finished steel products. It is understood that shell steel, for instance, can be had at $27 to $29 per ton, in the form either of large billets or of rounds. While this would be an excellent material for most forging purposes, there is scarcely any demand from the forging shops, as they have few orders.

There is limited employment for the material for rerolling purposes, but demand for concrete bars and other classes of material that can be rerolled from high carbon steel is likewise very limited. There are occasional offers of discard steel, but as prices are usually in the neighborhood of those asked for regular shell steel the prospective buyer is disposed to consider regular shell steel rather than discard steel. For reguar soft steel there is practically no inquiry, and producers are making no effort to force the situation, realizing that the market has no absorbing power.

The gain in coke production, which began in the first week of the year, was continued last week, but not at quite the same rate. The increase for the week was 17,386 tons, compared with the increase of 21,790 tons the preceding week. While coke output kept up an outward trend, to a total of 271,366 tons, coal failed even to hold its own, the 170,915 tons shipped being a decrease of 2,653 tons from the week preceding. This was the direct consequence of a marked decline, or almost no demand, for steam coal and a curtailment in the requisitions from by-product oven operators. Furnace coke is being absorbed by contracts as fas as produced, but there is an absence of inquiry, traceable to the fact that furnacemen are disposed to slow down until the pig iron market becomes more active.

SEES NATION'S HOPE IN POST-WAR THRIFT

John J. Pulleyn Urges Bankers to Keep Liberty Loan Machinery for Sale of Other Bonds.

TEACH THE SMALL SAVERS

Would Have Buyers of $50 and $100 Liberty Bonds Turn to Paper of Foreign Nations.

"To aid humanity, to put Europe on a self-sustaining basis, to build for ourselves a great and enduring foreign trade, to secure prosperity, to prevent adversity at home, otherwise unavoidable, we must raise money, absorb securities, in a volume so great that it is hopeless to look to our pre-war financial machinery."

John J. Pulleyn, President of the Emigrant Industrial Savings Bank, and Chairman of the Committee on Savings of the Savings Bank Section of the American Bankers' Association, in an article entitled "Perpetuating War Savings as Peace Savings," in the current issue of the association's journal, thus sums up the task of the United States in the immediate two-year period of reconstruction following the end of the war and makes the following suggestions:

"We must attempt to retain as habitual savers and investors the 20,000,000 Liberty Loan subscribers—the $50 and $100 bond buyers. The bond houses alone cannot reach them—the banks can. The banks must do the work as they did in the Liberty Loans, but now, instead of spending time, effort, and money, at a loss, sure and foreseen, they should sell bonds and reap a double reward in greatly enriched communities, stable labor conditions, a constant increment of all those conditions of local prosperity on which the prosperity of a local bank depends.

"There should be organized in every community a Committee on Industrial Safety, which will undertake the work of educating the people of that community through frequent meetings, through addresses of well-coached speakers before every social, religious, labor, industrial, and commercial organization. The organizations of four-minute men would make a most effective unit in this respect. Instead of disbanding them, they should be continued for this work.

"A campaign should be carried on to show the imperative necessity of thrift—thrift to the full meaning of the word—deliberate and premeditated saving for investment—investment in the bonds of the industries which furnish the payrolls of the nation on which, directly or indirectly, we all depend. I would like to see our people taught that they should buy bonds of foreign Governments, when the credits so created are to be spent in this country for the products of American labor, to enable a continuance of the wage from which the individual makes the savings to buy the bonds.

"The machinery exists—the banks are the hub of the wheel. I hope every banker will plan now to perpetuate to peace-time needs the machinery of the Liberty Bond distribution which he had so large a part in building and of which he is so important an element. The problem is here—it is with us now. The solution cannot wait; the natural forces which sway nations to prosperity or adversity do not wait; the need for action is today.

"The immediate need of the world is money. America is the one great reservoir of wealth. If we use our wealth wisely we can relieve the sufferings of millions of people, make them self-sustaining, restore prosperity to the world before our business lifetime's end, increase our wealth, our revenues, insure our material welfare, stabilize and make permanent our industrial future. If we use our wealth selfishly, mistakenly, at this time, we shall prolong the suffering of others and thwart the enduring prosperity of ourselves.

"In normal times foreign countries to which we export merchandise would seek to pay us in goods—would seek to export to us as much as or more than we send them, using gold to settle the trade balance, if in our favor. Our foreign debtors will be unable to pay us in goods until their industries have been rebuilt and reorganized, some years hence. Neither can they pay us in gold.

"If our foreign debtors could pay us in goods it would render far less profitable, indeed far more serious, our internal industrial situation. It may be said, broadly speaking, that the prosperity of nations is determined in a great measure by the excess of their exports over their imports. An individual who produces and saves more than he consumes in living and pleasures has a margin which can go toward his enrichment. A nation which produces no more than it consumes is like a salaried man who saves nothing from his earnings and can make no investments, the interest on which will increase his income. If the nation produces more than it consumes and more than it can use in its internal development, and does not sell the surplus to foreign customers, it suffers from over-production and must reduce the surplus by restricting production, which means unemployment and hard times.

"It is estimated that in order to refinance our domestic industries, return our factories to a condition of peace-time production, carry on our public improvements, equip ourselves for foreign trade, provide the materials and machinery to rebuild and re-equip devastated regions abroad, we must provide from $12,000,000,000 to $15,000,000,000 yearly for at least two years."

PRICES HOLD FIRM IN COTTON MARKET

Short Selling Decreases—Rallying Tendency Is Shown in All Active Positions.

There was a steadiness to the trading in the local cotton market yesterday, accounted for in part by the absence of the heavy selling pressure from quarters which had been so active the last week. Opening prices ranged from 15 points higher for January, with declines of 4 to 10 points for the other months, compared with Friday's closing quotations. Shortly after the call sufficient cotton appeared to cause prices to go back 22 to 28 points from the preceding day's closing, but the market very shortly worked out of this selling and on an active demand for the distant months, stimulated by the shorts attempting to cover, prices rallied to a maximum advance ranging from 32 points for October to 44 for the list. At these levels January was selling at 26.25c, March 25.12c, May 23.74c, July 26.60c, and October 20.53c. The closing was barely firm, with nominal changes in the final prices compared with Friday's last.

Yesterday's quotations follow:

BUTTER AND EGG MARKET.

BUTTER.—Receipts yesterday: 5,195 packages. Market broken badly, top grades of creamery declining about 3c., with other grades sharing in the weakness but not to so great an extent. Trade very slow at the lower figures. EGGS.—There was a little better trade, and the market maintained a fairly steady tone, the Exchange sales ranging from 61½c to 62c for firsts. Advices of shipments in transit are still conflicting. Ohio Valley sections generally report lighter collections this week, and limits are maintained on a good deal of the stock here. Storage eggs, without material change. Some very inferior goods are showing up among the remaining supplies, showing heavy loss, for which any reasenable bids have to be accepted. Nearby white eggs are cleaning up better, and the market is firmer. Finest Californias have shown some improvement in consequence of this condition, but the demand is limited at the prices quoted, and the under grades are still moving slowly. Fresh gathered, extras, a dozen, 64@64½c; extra firsts, 63@63½c; firsts, 61½@62c; seconds and poorer, 56@61c; dirties, No. 1, 56@57c; No. 2 and poorer, 53@55c; checks, good to choice, dry, 49@51c; under grades, 43@48c; refrigerator, 48@53c; State, Pennsylvania, and nearby Western, hennery whites, fine to fancy, 69@70c; ordinary to prime, 63@68c; gathered whites, ordinary to fine, 62@69c; pullet whites, 61@62c; Pacific Coast whites, extras, 70c; lower grades, 63@68c; Western and Southern, gathered whites, 62@68c; State, Pennsylvania, and nearby hennery browns, 67@68c; gathered brown and mixed colors, 62@64½c.

Conservation of Thrift Habits

In The Annalist tomorrow, an interesting article discusses plans to meet the new-born spirit of investment and thrift, inculcated in the people of the United States through the Government Liberty Loans.

Suggestions to prevent the loss of the great lesson of thrift are made in the article, which earnestly advocates some plan to make the people of the United States keep on saving.

A course, approved by the heads of several bond houses, is the issue of public utility stocks and bonds in denominations small enough to meet the purse of the small buyer. Such action, it is pointed out, would be both patriotic and economical.

The Merchant's Point of View

IT really begins to look, judging from some of the happenings of the past week, as though producers were commencing to realize that the war is over and that wartime prices cannot be maintained. The realization of this seems to have come to some with rather a severe wrench, as the taking of excessive profits had been continued long enough to have crystalized into a habit. There had been, furthermore, so little objection manifested by the general public toward paying more for everything that it appeared to be an easy matter to go ahead on such a basis. The only flaw in the reasoning was that no account was taken of the exaltation of feeling that had been aroused by patriotic appeals while the war was on and that repressed or stilled any inclination which might have tended to produce discord in a period when private interests were subordinated or swallowed up in the larger public ones. The patient ultimate consumer, who was content to deprive himself of luxuries and even of some of the things he used to consider as necessaries, and to pay exorbitant prices for what he did get—all because he believed these were a help to winning the war—is beginning to look after himself more now that the war has been won. He cannot be convinced that the high levels to which prices were pushed are necessary at the present time. Manifestations of this change of sentiment have come to the retailers and have by them been pushed on to the wholesalers. From the latter they went to the producers, who are beginning to sit up and take notice.

Some Reductions in Prices.

During the week there have been a number of business meetings in this city. Perhaps the most important have been those of the jobbers and wholesalers, who together make up the National Wholesale Dry Goods Association and its kindred bodies. What was to be uppermost in their deliberations, according to the titles of the addresses announced in advance, was the matter of the trend of prices. Apparently to meet the views of these distributers, producers of different kinds of textiles made public their new lists of prices, which showed substantial reductions, ranging in certain lines from 25 to 33 per cent. below those recently in vogue. There was less uncertainty on the part of cotton men than of those engaged in the manufacture of woolens. The latter are in somewhat of a quandary because of the uncertainty as to the cost of the raw material. Even among the makers of cotton goods variances of opinion are noted. Manufacturers of plain fabrics and of hosiery have been quickest to fall in with the trend toward lower figures. The blanket and napped goods makers and the knitters of underwear have been disposed to give ground slowly. Many of them contend that their prices had not been raised proportionately as much as had other cotton goods, and that as to some of them the prices in effect before the war were not on paying levels. But then, on the other hand, none of the reductions on any lines brings the new prices anywhere near those prevailing in ante-bellum times, nor is there any likelihood of this coming about for a long period to come. Some say it will never come.

Raw Material and Finished Product.

Now, it is not the way the mills or the jobbers, or even the retailers regard this matter of prices which will count. It is what the consuming public will say and do. An increased income tax added to the other burdens of the cost of living is apt to cause a closer scrutiny of all expenditures and lead to a comparison with previous prices. In the case of underwear it looks as though some things may require explanation in order to satisfy the inquisitive. Take, for example, the case of the 16-pound union suits of standard Northern make. The jobbing price in 1915 of these goods was $6.26 per dozen. Cotton at that time averaged 11 cents a pound. Next year, with cotton costing 5 cents more a pound, the price of the garments was only lifted to $8.83, an addition of 57 cents, or 23 cents less than the increase in the cost of the raw material. In 1917, with cotton averaging 25 cents a pound, the price of the suits was advanced to $9.90. Here, with an increase of $1.44 in the cost of the raw cotton, there was an advance of $3.07 in the trade price of the garments. Last year cotton averaged 32 cents a pound, and there were two sets of prices for the suits. At the outset the trade price was $13.85 per dozen, an increase of $3.95 over the year before, though the cost of the cotton in them aggregated only $1.12. Late in the year, after conferences with the trade, the Government fixed the price of the suits at $18 per dozen, or $4.15 above what had been the case. At the end of 1918 the suits sold at wholesale for $11.74 more than they did three years before, while the cotton in them cost only $3.36 more according to the average market quotations. Here is a discrepancy of $8.38.

Where the Consumer Comes In.

It is not contended that the added price of the raw material was the only factor in increasing the cost of the garments. The higher wages figure as another element, although the importance of this may well be exaggerated. How much of the $8.38 difference in the price of a dozen suits is represented by this additional labor cost is a question. That it is only a small proportion may be inferred from the fact that all the goods are machine made and that it will take a very substantial increase of wages to bring about an addition of $1 per dozen in the cost of manufacturing the suits. There are, however, certain other factors such as the increased cost of fuel, needles, and other supplies. But, on the other hand, it is by no means certain that the prices paid for raw cotton averaged anywhere near as high as the figures given, which in the previous calculation were set down as 32 cents per pound for last year. In the new prices for next Fall's goods the suits are put down to the trade at $16.50 per dozen. By the time they passed through the hands of the jobbers and other intermediaries and reached the consuming public this price would be more than doubled. It would mean that consumers will have to pay from $3 upward per suit as against the price of $1.50, which was current two years ago. The doubt as to the willingness of retail buyers to meet this advance is the cause of no little hesitation and uncertainty in the trade. This is what caused the conference on Friday between producers, selling agents, and jobbers of knit goods. Buyers were not disposed to put in orders without a guarantee of protection and before they got through, they succeeded in obtaining it.

Making Statistics More Useful.

As has hitherto been stated in THE TIMES, the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce is engaged in the task of rearranging its tabular statistics of imports and exports so as to make them of greater service. The first great step in this direction is the preparing of a proper and adequate classification. Up to the present time articles brought in or shipped out have been arranged in alphabetical order, with a few groups classified. This has its disadvantages, as those can testify who have tried, for instance, to look up "rubber" only to find it, after needless labor, under the I list as india rubber. Then the lists were subdivided in accordance with provisions in the tariff acts, which may have had its advantages when the duties were to be tinkered with, but which was the despair of all who had to consult them. The latter were forever running across the "N. E. S."—otherwise, not elsewhere specified—which included very many of the articles which business men were interested in. In the new classification there is not only a natural grouping similar to that in use in British and other statistics of trade, but the subdivisions are sufficiently detailed and explicit to be really informing. The classification of chemicals, for example, is about as thorough a piece of work of this kind as has ever been done by anybody. Another good idea which is being carried out is a co-operation with the Census Bureau, so that a similar classification of domestic production may be made. In this way it will be possible to make comparisons of production, imports, and exports of the same articles. Suggestions are still invited from all interested for further improvement!

Cotton and Cotton Fabrics.

When the Government, through the price-fixing committee of the War Industries Board, established prices on cotton fabrics, it based them on 30-cent cotton, or at least this was the claim. One reason given for not fixing prices on the raw material was that these would be automatically regulated by the prices of the fabrics. What happened during the past week seemed to bear out this theory somewhat. At the beginning of the week the announcement was made of a 25 per cent. cut in the prices of certain standard bleached cottons, and this weakened the prices of other fabrics in the gray. Following this came a decided drop in the quotations of cotton. Other factors are likely to work in the same direction, especially the curtailment of production at the mills. Domestic spinners have not done much buying lately and are said to be using up their reserves, and Great Britain seems to have enough cotton on hand to meet all possible requirements for a while. In the goods market there has been a fair show of activity because of the offerings to jobbers who have been in the market. Dealings in certain goods, like cotton blankets, are reported to have been quite fair, but in general there does not seem to be any great eagerness to buy. Some assurances or guarantees that prices will not be lower are sought, but are not always forthcoming. Once buyers are satisfied that needless inflation is gone, business is apt to pick up, but it looks as though some time must elapse before ordering far ahead will be resumed.

As to Wool and Woolens.

A little more success attended the Government wool auctions of the week than was the case in the preceding ones. This was attributed in some degree to the announcement of the minimum prices and their comparison with the British issue prices for similar wools. Bidders kept close to the minimum in most instances in doing their buying, and it was noted that dealers kept aloof. From now on the chances are that the Government will hurry up and get out of the wool business as soon as possible, leaving prices to be settled by economic conditions. The mills will be able to go ahead on this basis, and a number of them are preparing to do so. It will doubtless be discovered that the British manufacturers of woolens will have no great advantage, if any, over those in this country so far as the cost of the raw material is concerned. In dress goods, as was shown at one of the jobbers' meetings the other day, the manufacturers here are in a better position than are the French manufacturers and can produce more cheaply certain staple fabrics. The mills are eager to do business, the leading factor in the trade having about half its capacity idle, and there will be little further delay in getting out the lines for the next Fall season. The manufacturing clothiers are waiting for the offerings, and retailers are a little curious as to how great the price reductions are to be.

TO MASTER FOREIGN TRADE.

Courses of Study Outlined for Those to be Engaged in It.

Suggestions have been made in a bulletin issued by the Federal Board for Vocational Education at Washington, D. C., for courses of study to meet the requirements of those who must learn the practical aspects of the fundamentals of overseas commerce within a short time.

The bulletin was written and prepared by Dr. R. S. MacElwee, agent for commercial education in the board. Because of his experience as salesman and executive in foreign trade and his experience in economics and foreign trade at Columbia University, he is able to view the problem both from the standpoint of the man who must use it in selling American products in other countries and of the teacher.

It is hoped that the courses outlined in the bulletin will be suggestive of application to any kind of training in the basic principles of foreign trade and shipping. But the people to whom the bulletin especially appeals are those employed in the day in some business houses, and in contact with some of the problems of the subject, who may study by expanding the outlines suggested; high school seniors who are to be trained to be junior clerks in the export business and brought into practical contact with that business on a part-time arrangement; and engineers whose technical training must be supplemented by training in the essentials of the routine of foreign commerce in order properly to represent American interests abroad.

Business men are urged to take the initiative in regard to this matter, as the success of the educational and training movement depends upon the benefit which it will have to the merchants and manufacturers engaged in foreign commerce. Recent developments in foreign commerce and the increase in foreign trade, emphasized the need of special training so that the merchants of this country may successfully compete with foreign merchants who are looking forward to this trade.

With a merchant marine of possibly 25,000,000 tons the question of shore operation, or management of ships for a profit will be an important factor of the commercial life of this country. New demands will be made on our consular offices by the merchant marine, thereby increasing the necessity of technical training for efficiency in this service.

It will require the united efforts of individuals and organizations interested in this field of activity to make the present and future plans in this field as practical as possible. This bulletin is only the first effort toward definite progress. The co-operation of all institutions, teachers, publishers, and any others interested in foreign trade education is invited by the Federal Board. Only by this co-operation will subsequent bulletins prove of greatest value to those for whom they are prepared.

The bulletin contains outlines of short unit courses in foreign trade technique, on common selling methods and practices, the mechanism of foreign trade, exchange, credit, and banking, ocean transportation, marine insurance, trade routes, foreign tariffs, and commercial policies.

DROP IN INDIA'S CROPS.

Yields of Indigo and Cotton to be Below Last Year's.

The first forecast of the 1918-19 indigo crop was issued recently by the Indian Department of Statistics, according to Consul General James A. Smith of Calcutta. The estimates are based on reports received from six provinces, which contain practically the whole area under indigo in British India. The total area sown is estimated at 280,500 acres, being about 55 per cent. below the revised estimate at the corresponding date a year ago. As compared with the final 1917-18 estimate, 690,600 acres, the present estimate shows a decrease of 59 per cent. The total yield of dye is now roughly estimated at 32,100 hundredweight, based on 112 pounds, as against 70,300 hundredweight, estimated at this time a year ago, or a decrease of 54 per cent. Comparing this with the final 1917-18 estimate, 67,900 hundredweight, the present estimate shows a decrease of 63 per cent. Weather conditions at sowing time were unfavorable. Owing to the insufficient rainfall the conditions of the crop on the whole are only fair.

There has also been a decrease in the cotton supply. Reports that have been received from all the cotton-growing provinces of the country have been used by the department in compiling its second forecast for the 1918-19 season. The estimate relates generally to sowings made up to October of last year. The area so far reported totals 15,814,000 acres and is 25 per cent. below the estimate of a year ago. The decrease is mainly due to the unfavorable weather conditions. The average percentage in Mysore is 60 per cent., in Ajmer-Merwara 60 per cent., in Rajputana 46 per cent., in Madras 41 per cent., in Bombay and Hyderabad 46 per cent., in the United Provinces 37 per cent., Central India 12 per cent., and in the Central Provinces and Berar 9 per cent. On the other hand, the Northwest Frontier Province shows an increase of 41 per cent., Burma 33 per cent., Sind 31 per cent., Punjab 14 per cent., Bihar and Orissa 13 per cent., and Assam 3 per cent.

New Lines of Women's Neckwear.

In the new women's neckwear lines the tendency seems to be toward somewhat smaller collars in particularly neat and rich effects. These are gained in some of the lines by employing unusually handsome imitation "val," filet, and venise laces which, especially in the case of some of the narrow and finer "vals," are almost impossible to tell from the real. These laces are employed not only in organdy collars, but also in combinations with georgette, in both of which they make a very beautiful appearance.

More Call for Table Linens.

Reports received in the local trade show that the call for table linens is increasing greatly. Although a large part of the business is being done in plain goods there has also been a big demand for Madeira linens, which are now considered as staple articles. In the retail trade the former spurt of economy among the high-class trade has affected the sale of real lace table linens. At present, however, these goods are being bought more freely.

Good Season for Veilings.

Not only are all the veiling manufacturers agreed that this season should be an exceptionally good one in their line, but many veiling buyers have expressed the same opinion. In the new lines are shown many novel patterns, among the most popular being hexagon and filets. Chenille dots are used in a very liberal manner, and many beautiful effects are obtained by combining chenille dots and scroll patterns.

Argentina's Crops.

Commercial Attaché Robert S. Barrett of Buenos Aires has cabled that the Government official estimate for this year's crops are as follows: Wheat, 5,-015,000 tons; exportable surplus, 4,300,000 tons; linseed, 703,000 tons, with an export surplus of 679,000 tons; oats, 640,-000 tons.

Mr. Munn's Resignation.

John R. Munn, recently elected President of the Textile Alliance Export Corporation, has resigned his position as assistant selling agent of the American Woolen Company of New York, and has also tendered his resignation to the American Woolen Products Company.

Trade with Palestine and Syria.

The American Consul at London cables that the Board of Trade has given notice authorising commercial and financial transactions in Palestine and Syria as far north as a line from Alexandretta to Aleppo, inclusive, and as far east as the Hejaz Railway, inclusive.

WOOLEN GOODS IN CANADA.

Domestic Mills to Supply the Next Six Months' Demands.

Canadian woolen mills, it is said, can supply the markets in that country for the next six months, according to Consul Felix S. S. Johnson, Kingston, Ontario. During the next year, however, it is expected that imported goods will be very scarce. Estimates of some importers place the period of high prices at at least two years. No samples of new goods are expected for at least six months, and the delivery of goods from Europe in quantity would then be six months later or even longer.

At present woolen firms in Canada are only able to purchase in limited quantities. Many large orders are still unfilled that have been booked for a period between one and two years at prices that have still not been fixed. Some of these orders have been confirmed within the past two months at prices considerably higher than previous quotations. Since mills will be obliged to complete delivery of orders before entering on new orders, the prices which they fix will govern the course of clothing values for the next twelve months.

An importer who has investigated conditions in the woolen and general dry goods trade in the United States and Canada stated that the market was practically bare of supplies and that prices were from 15 to 50 per cent. higher for the next year than they have been. He asserted that representatives of English houses were in New York looking for goods, particularly hosiery. There have been surprisingly few cancellations of orders.

Manufacturers' agents for English firms have practically nothing to offer. The market is relatively bare of civilian goods. Canadian houses that are in close touch with the situation in Great Britain and some of whom have received cable advices recently from representatives who are now seeking British goods, state that practically nothing is offering, and that for the scanty supply that is to be had prices are from 15 to 50 per cent. higher than for the goods bought for the Fall trade of 1918.

CELEBRITIES IN TILE.

Portraits of Notables Used in This Form for Fireplaces.

Military and naval heroes with a few other great men of the day and the war are being immortalized in fireplaces, where their portraits in tiles are used as the keystone. Roosevelt is one of the men who is to be memorialized in this way, and there has been a large demand for his portraits in tile, just as in other forms, since his death. There is a Wilson tile, and one New York man has a tiled portrait of the President on each side of his fireplace.

There are tile portraits of Lloyd George, Asquith, and Admirals Beatty and Jellicoe, and those of Pershing and Foch are soon to arrive in this country. The portraits are excellent likenesses. The man who makes the likenesses, using several photographs, is George Cartlidge, the English sculptor. He carves the portrait in low relief, a die is made, from which the tiles are cast, and these are baked in a continuous oven at 1,600 degrees Fahrenheit in a kiln at Stoke-on-Trent. The sculptor is particularly clever at this kind of work.

The artist charges $1,000 a portrait. The tiles retail at about $5, the price varying somewhat according to the location of the dealer who sells them. They have a brilliant glaze and come in three color tones, the brown, in which Roosevelt and Wilson appear, being the best.

RAW SILK MARKETS.

A General Lack of Activity is Reported, in All of Them.

It cannot be said that the raw silk market is especially active at the present. In Japan, according to advices received by A. P. Villa Brothers, Inc., prices are a trifle firmer, Sinshiu No. 1 being quoted at 1,490 yen, as against 1,480 a week ago. Buyers re-entered the market to a moderate extent, but there have been no transactions of any importance. The visible stock is estimated at 32,000 bales.

At Canton buyers are taking no interest and reelers are indifferent, declining to make any concessions. The Shanghai market is very quiet, with prices unchanged. A dull market is also reported in Italy, with little buying for European account and none for American.

A little better feeling is reported locally, but manufacturers are so far only covering their immediate wants. It is, however, the general belief that the silk mills are today carrying the smallest stock of raws, and that as soon as the strike situation which is threatening in the garment trade and also in Paterson has been cleared up, there will develop a scope of great activity, which may be followed by a sharp advance in all raw silk prices.

NEWEST IN MILLINERY.

Among the Models Shown Are Some in Faille Watered Silk.

In a line of model hats just shown are some in faille watered silk in light shades. This material is just beginning to make its appearance. One of the models is a short back poke effect with extremely wide front. It is in American Beauty shade, and its trim consists of a cluster of dull-toned grapes. Another model of this material in Titian shade has a drenched ostrich pom pom on the side. The models are priced at $10.

Among cheaper hats is one with a basket weave effect of French blue and tan chrysanthemum straw. The top of the crown of this little poke is of the blue straw and it has around the brim a two-inch band of tan and blue chrysanthemum interwoven. Tan curly quills are placed on the side.

There are also linere shapes trimmed with wide moire ribbon bows. One model has the edge of the brim made of loops of linere about one inch wide. Through these loops the moire ribbon can be seen. The crown is round and regularly shaped of narrow moire ribbon. A tiny moire ribbon bow at the front lends a neat finish.

Fair Gray Goods Trading.

For a Saturday, the business in gray goods in the local market yesterday was quite brisk. There was an evident disposition on the part of both buyers and sellers to trade. Some fairly large business was done in printcloths from first hands for this month's and February and March deliveries. Thirty-nine-inch 68-72s were disposed of at 12½ cents, and 38½-inch 64-60s and 60-52s at 10½ and 9¾ cents, respectively. There were also notable dealings in gauze fabrics and in sateens and twills. Altogether, the transactions were regarded as quite promising and as showing a belief in the stability of present values.

Sealskins of 1918.

A lot of sealskins were brought to Seattle on Jan. 3 on the steamer Roosevelt, which had come from the Pribiloff Islands. From St. Paul Island came 2,899 of the skins, and from St. George Island 4,584. During the calendar year 1918 27,503 seals were killed on the former island and 7,387 on the latter, making a total of 34,890. This is within 110 skins of the authorized quota of 35,000.

Sale of Philippine Underwear.

During the last two weeks there has been a decided decrease in the sale of Philippine underwear. Salesmen who are now out with these lines are not having any difficulty in selling these goods. In fact, the orders that are now being taken are much larger than any that have been received for some time. Two orders that were taken last week, which amounted to nearly $40,000 each, are considered in the trade as being exceptionally large.

Petticoat Business Increasing.

Some very liberal orders are being received by manufacturers of petticoats from out-of-town buyers who are now in this city purchasing their new Spring lines. Reports sent in by the salesmen on the road are very encouraging, especially in the South and West. In these sections the buying is very heavy, particularly on the high-priced lines.

"December 6th, 1918

We want to take this opportunity to tell you of our appreciation of the financial help you have given us by your plan of purchasing accounts receivable—and to say also that we believe you are filling a need which is not taken care of by any other kind of financial institution.

Take our concern for an example. We increased our business during this last year from a little over half a million to over $900,000 with very little new capital in the business. This would have been impossible had we not been able to sell our accounts to you.

During the last six months we have paid you $2,508.87 interest and this has enabled us to secure $5,644.96 discount on our purchases.

For a concern who needs new capital in their business, we are firmly convinced that your method of financing, though slightly higher in cost than borrowing at a bank, is by far the best method."

OUR METHOD of not notifying your customers permits you to make the collections in your usual way.

THE BAN UPON DRINK.

National prohibition advances to its triumph over the remnants of now unconsidered political principles which for more than half a century were articles of orthodox party faith, were the enduring cause of severance and contention between the two great party organizations in the country. Failing altogether in the Washington temperance movement of eighty years ago, when there was vastly greater need of it than is now the case, public opinion puts strong drink under statutory ban in this year 1919 when, through the operation of social, moral, and industrial forces, we had already become a very temperate nation. The prohibition amendment is lightheartedly and with amazing speed ratified by one Legislature after another, though it involves profound and somewhat disquieting economic and fiscal disturbance to which little attention is paid.

The venerable Democratic doctrine of State rights is flouted and consistency is driven shuddering from her seat by this decision, really surprising though not unexpected. It has been a doctrine of the Democratic Party that powers not expressly granted to the Federal Government in the Constitution were reserved to the States respectively and to the people. Prohibition by an amendment of the Federal Constitution is obviously a bold invasion of the police power of the State. It was HAYNE, a Senator from South Carolina, who in his great speech upon the Foote resolution in 1830 said:

> Who, then, Mr. President, are the true friends of the Union? Those who would confine the Federal Government strictly within the limits prescribed by the Constitution; who would preserve to the States and to the people all the powers not expressly delegated; who would make this a Federal and not a National Union, and who, administering the Government in a spirit of equal justice, would make it a blessing and not a curse.

That was Democratic doctrine, we may say, until under Mr. BRYAN'S leadership of that party and under Mr. ROOSEVELT'S Administration the people became accustomed to a gradual but manifest effacement of State boundaries. And South Carolina, the State of HAYNE, was one of the earlier States to ratify the amendment. Indeed, it is to the "solid South" that national prohibition owes its triumph. It has been everywhere recognized that in the Southern States the liquor problem is peculiar, it is vital; and there is no disposition to deny that an absolute ban upon drink was needed there for the protection and reclamation of large social elements not easily accessible to any less positive persuasion.

When the Washington temperance movement was on foot, practically contemporaneous with the Father Mathew movement across the Atlantic, there was obvious need that restraint be put upon the drink habit. Indulgence was wellnigh universal, excess much more common than now. Any one who has been privileged to inspect the cash accounts of clergymen of Puritan descent, with their frequent entries of "seven gallons of New England rum"; any one who has by tradition or by perusal of the chronicles of the time come to know the social habits of that day can readily understand both the timeliness and the failure of that movement. It is very different now. Industrialism is a great foe of drink. The factory hand who controls complex processes or guides intricate machinery cannot hold his place if he is given to overindulgence. There has been a social ban upon drink, anything beyond moderate indulgence is held to be "bad form." Even in the small towns "the village drunkard," once the subject of jest and mirth, has been made to feel his disgrace so keenly that he is disappearing.

So it fell out that the currents of social custom and the wise inclination of communities of late have powerfully aided the movement against saloons. Above all, we think it had been quickened by emotions born of the war, and by the very practical feeling that at a time when we had pledged "all our resources" to the cause of liberty and of justice we could tolerate no waste of energy in foolish and harmful indulgence. Those whose use of stimulants was moderate and not harmful, those who may have felt that submission to the ban was a sacrifice, have nevertheless been willing to make that sacrifice. For others less willing, for those who have resisted, we may conclude that enforced denial will be for their good.

We do not think that any reasonable man will deny that abstinence from the use of intoxicants will be of national benefit and advantage. It is not so much against the thing itself as the manner of doing it that objection has been raised. Men have felt that the States which needed prohibition should have it by their own individual action, that in making their need and determination binding upon all was involved a surrender of principle which we may haye later occasion to regret. There will be no prolonged heartburnings about that. Political principles hallowed by long respect and observance survive so long as they serve their ends; when they stand opposed to other principles which the people are persuaded to regard as of higher present service, the old is discarded, the new dominates thought and action. State rights have gone by the board, the South has taken a long step forward in centralization, but so far as a statute may accomplish moral reform, we have abolished the drink evil and the American people will be the better for it.

INSTRUCTION OF SENATORS.

Grave as augurs, perhaps not refraining from an augural grin and wink, the New York Senate and Assembly have asked Senator CALDER and Senator WADSWORTH to vote for the Federal Suffrage amendment. Both Senators are alive to the humor of the proceeding. Senator CALDER, who voted for the amendment, will do so again on his own hook and at his own risk, without thanks to the kindly directors of his conscience at Albany. Senator WADSWORTH, for whose reproof and admonition the resolution was passed, is impenitent and will vote No again.

In the New Hampshire Legislature a more amusing, if a little obscure, farce was played. Somebody, probably some innocent self-deluding suffragist, started the story that Mr. MOSES, Senator-elect, would plump for the amendment if so instructed by the Legislature. The Assembly asked him to be good to the amendment. The Senate squelched the request. One sniffs bouffe politics. It is unlikely that Mr. MOSES would commit himself to be the agent of a Legislature unable to mind its own business. If he did, the humorists of the Senate restrained the humorists of the House.

A feminist faction is trying to gaff all recalcitrant Senators by appeals to the Legislatures of their States. It seems curious that the Women Voters' Anti-Suffrage Party should have to inform State legislators that, since the ratification of the Seventeenth Amendment in 1913, Senators are elected by the people, and are responsible to the people. They were never responsible to the Legislatures, unless they chose to be, as LAMAR of Mississippi memorably did not choose to be. An instruction or any shadow of it given now to them by the Legislature is either an impertinence or a futility or both. The opinions emitted for political reasons of the New York Legislature to the Senators in Congress from New York have rather less weight than resolutions of the same kind would if passed, say, by the Village Betterment Association of West Hurley.

CONDITIONS IN MEXICO.

For some time now Mexico has been an inaccessible and inarticulate land to Americans, who should know it best. To many of us who read PRESCOTT and admired PORFIRIO DIAZ it used to be the country of desire. To pore over TERRY'S fascinating guidebook was to yearn for a sight of the happy valley of Cuernavaca, one of the most beautiful spots on earth; to visit in fancy the picturesque capital, so rich in antiquarian treasures and historical relics, so full of contrasts of ancient churches and modern architecture of graceful design, and so curious in its mingling of many races and its exuberant life; and to revel in descriptions of radiant Guadalajara, mediaeval Zacatecas, Durango of the matchless climate, ever-quaint Orizaba, and oriental Puebla of the snow-crowned volcanoes and the sixty churches. But five years of revolution and continuous civil strife have closed Mexico to the traveler and made it a land of mystery to the outside world. It has become inarticulate in the sense that the voice of interpretation and authority is not heard. What are the real political conditions? Is life safe anywhere in the distressful country? Is there such a thing as law and order in any of the States? What remains of its monuments and glories of art? Among its several rulers is there one masterful man adroit enough to reconcile factions and give distracted Mexico the peace that will set her feet again in the path of progress?

The political manifesto now issued by President CARRANZA does not answer these questions, throws no shaft of light into the void behind him. Ostensibly a plea for a truce in politics in the shadow of a Presidential campaign, in which he cannot be a candidate without overriding the new Constitution and usurping power, it is really a warning to his followers that the faction which he represents by a "gentlemen's agreement" is in danger of overthrow by those whom he calls reactionaries of the old régime. Government servants, soldiers, Judges, and Governors are urged to abstain from political campaigning in the public interests until the eve of the election two years hence. This paper, which is the only official word that has come out of Mexico for a long time, would convey the idea that only two parties exist there, the supporters of the Government and an unscrupulous opposition. What are the facts?

There is no well-organized party in Mexico, and in several States the authority of the Carranza Government is defied. ZAPATA, who demands the reinstatement of the Indians on the lands they were ousted from by convenient legal process, still rules in Morelos; FELIX DIAZ is intrenched in the States of Vera Cruz and Puebla; and MEIXUEIRO, a pure-blooded Zapotec but a man of education and ability, controls Oaxaca. In Chihuahua and Sinaloa VILLA, or his regent on earth if he is no longer alive, keeps the field in open rebellion. VILLA always supported the platform of ZAPATA. A dangerous rival of any candidate favored by CARRANZA is ALVARADO, a protagonist of the I. W. W., who wants to set up a Syndicalistic State.

MANUEL GAMIO, Director of Archaeology, has written of the real Zapataism that it "were better called Indianism, for "it has persisted vigorously in all Mexico "since CORTEZ raised his standards on "the shore of Villa Rica." ZAPATA is anathema to the Carrancistas, but if not a man of education he is one of ability and force of character, and a true leader of the Indians who form 80 per cent. of the population of Mexico. Bandits may wear the mask of Zapatism, but the leader himself has administrative talent and he preserves order in the districts occupied by him. A recent visitor to Mexico reports that he felt himself safe where DIAZ and ZAPATA ruled, but that he had no illusions about his insecurity when he depended for protection upon the Carrancista troops, which have an unenviable reputation for looting.

FELIX DIAZ may be under suspicion of planning the return to power of the old régime, but ZAPATA will never compromise with any Government or faction that refuses to restore the Indians to their lands. Both DIAZ and ZAPATA were anti-German during the war, also they were pro-American, whereas the evidence is incontrovertible that CARRANZA came under the influence of VON ECKHARDT, the German Minister, as did his officers, with the exception of General PABLO GONZALEZ. They entertained no doubt that the Germans would win a military triumph, and they were not undeceived until the very last. The victory of the United States and its allies may have brought the Carrancistas to their senses. It also seems to be the fact that President CARRANZA has not been averse to recognizing the political strength of the I. W. W., whose leader ALVARADO is a man to be reckoned with.

The demand for a return to the more practicable Constitution of 1857 is strong and growing in Mexico, and one thing is certain, there will never be peace and a stable Government until the Indian problem is solved. In his support of it CARRANZA is not thought to be sincere by the Indians; he is suspected of juggling with it. If he has a slogan it is: "Americans shall not exploit Mexico." By this he means that their concessions must not yield them wealth, that profits from the industries of Mexico shall accrue only to Mexicans. It is an idea that appeals powerfully to many of his followers who have grown rich out of the revolution, but in CARRANZA'S mind it signifies an ineradicable prejudice. At the capital the poverty and misery are said to be indescribable, although the Government chiefs and the army officers are flagrantly prosperous. But inside the so-called revolutionary lines there is enough, and content and hope, for it must be considered that many of the rebels are tillers of the soil. They do not find it difficult to purchase ammunition from the Carrancistas. The prediction has been made that the Indians will finally prevail in Mexico. DIAZ has adopted their cause; MEIXUEIRO has advocated it from the first, and ZAPATA will never abandon it. That the Carranza power is held together by a sinister "gentlemen's agreement," and is therefore unpopular among those who are not beneficiaries of it, is generally recognized by American observers who find their way into Mexico.

A DUTCH REVOLUTION.

If a country is to have a revolution thrust upon it, what could be more obliging in the revolutionaries than to prepare a time-table? Mr. DAVID WIJNKOOP, just half of the Social Democratic Party in the Dutch Second Chamber, and described as a vivid and an ardent orator, mighty with a crowd, has positively announced that there will be a revolution in Holland Jan. 20.

It may be remembered that the egregious Mr. TROELSTRA, chief of the Dutch Social Democratic Labor Party and an active international pro-German, was made so envious by Mr. WIJNKOOP'S laurels last Fall that he decided to "follow the example of Berlin." The police and the army were revolutionary, he was sure. While his labor party represented only about a fifth of the Dutch laborers, he felt certain that he could put down the bourgeoisie and become the boss of a proletarian State. Nobody but the police, army, and about everybody else, including the other chieftains of his party, was against him. There was a great rising of loyalty to the Throne. TROELSTRA subsided. The German example can hardly have made the Dutch revolutionists stronger. Political reforms, such as the abolition of the Senate, will find friends among the Liberals. The Queen herself has warned against reaction. Reforms such as old-age pensions and the eight-hour day can be fought for peaceably in a country that has manhood suffrage. Presumably economic distress is diminishing. But, doubtless Mr. WIJNKOOP knowns his own business, and the revolution is due tomorrow.

THE INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE

In his address to the Merchants' Association Secretary LANE said: "International law is filmy, gauzy, founded upon "precedent, and without certainty, decision, or definiteness." That is the reproach oftenest brought upon the common law. JEREMY BENTHAM thought he had reduced the common law to absurdity when he said that the common law was taught as law is taught to a dog—by beating him when he broke it, although until beaten he had no means of knowing what the law was. Germany is now under punishment for breaches of international law, and that precedent will discourage all imitators for untold generations. Just as Germany's crimes were not foreseen, others now unforeseen will become possible by the progress of science and invention. And just as the crimes of the world war are under punishment, although there never were laws passed against them by any international legislature, so every possible future breach of international common law will be punishable whenever the offense is the same; that is, whenever the universal conscience is outraged. The place to look for laws against such crimes is in the heart of common humanity, not in the books. No laws of the Medes or Persians are so unalterable as those which are deduced from the practice of mankind. Even the Germans among themselves do not do such things as they did to other peoples. The reason is simple. Society could not hold together if such crimes were customary. There would be no society of nations if Germany were allowed to go unpunished, and it is unthinkable that she should be unpunished for lack of law. Under German law German courts have found against the German Government in naval prize cases in this war. What would be the decision of German courts against alien soldiers or sailors who did to Germans what they have done to victims of other races?

It is not necessary to guess the answer. Last week a German spokesman, HARDEN, in Die Zukunft, pleaded guilty on behalf of Germany to "corruption, "fraud, theft, the open or secret violation "of all rights, while entire fields have "been soaked in blood." There is plenty of German law against that. There is the same law in every nation worthy to sit in the League of Nations. That is universal law, international law, the same in principle as the law between men. Germany has held to the doctrine that the State is above the law, and that might makes right. The war shows that in the past, and most certainly in the future, right makes might. Nations are not exceptions to the law of humanity.

Secretary LANE is committed to the League of Nations and eloquently supports it. This is no time for the philosophy of doubt, he says. America is the negation of the philosophy of despair. With Americans to will is to do, and he is sure that the league will be born. Welcoming his help, it is possible, nevertheless, to question whether "the first "thing the council would do would be to "declare upon paper just what the rules "are that govern between those nations "which entered into that compact." A law so written would have to be retroactive to fit Germany's case, and Germany can hardly be a charter member of that council. What the league has to agree upon is the machinery of the law, not upon its principles or expression in words. The law has been declared in part in The Hague conventions, and there may be added all the international law not yet phrased. But there is no way of convening an international grand jury for indicting the criminal and his accomplices, nor is there in existence a court for his trial. Under written law the case is difficult. Lawyers would delight to argue whether the defendants were guilty under a compact not existing when they sinned.

There is no such difficulty under the world's common law. It is drawn from a "codeless myriad of precedents," but is not confined to them. Common law judges make precedents as well as stand upon them. They make precedents not by looking into their own consciences, but by looking into the consciences of mankind, illuminated by all the reason mind can supply. There is plenty of law. The difficulty is to fit it to the case. It is even possible to affirm that the league already exists, as the law exists. That is the opinion of the Bar Association of this city, which on Friday received the report of its Committee Upon International Relations to the effect that what is needed is a court, not law. The laws of war are part of international law, and there have been crimes against both the written and unwritten laws of war. The Allies will go faster and further by dealing with old business first and leaving new business to be proceeded with at leisure. When this case shall have been disposed of, there will be both law and precedent enough for any future criminals.

THE ADRIATIC.

Recent events give still more point to the observation made in The New Europe, of London, in its issue of Jan. 2, that the question of Italian-Jugoslav relations in the Adriatic was a test case for the League of Nations. It is exactly such a case as is contemplated by those who urge the benefits of a League of Nations in reconciling international difficulties; if international authority and moral influence will not serve to harmonize this disagreement now, they can hardly be counted on in the case of similar disagreements that may arise in the future. By the measures that may be taken by the other allied nations to assist the Italians and the Jugoslavs in composing this difficulty, and the degree of success which they may attain, we shall be able to see before the conference is over whether a League of Nations will work or not—for if it will not work in situations of this sort we should hardly be content with it as a body maintained for the sake of promulgating occasional amiable codifications of moral sentiment.

The New Europe's opinion on this subject is worthy of quotation because its editors have been among the most active workers for an Italian-Slav entente such as was attained for a little while last Spring. In its columns many Italian liberals have expressed considerable dissatisfaction with SONNINO'S policy, and it is a sign of the tendency of sentiment in Italy that two of its Italian collaborators have just withdrawn on account of what they regard as an unduly Slavophile policy. This tendency is emphasized, of course, by the changes in the Italian Cabinet, which indicate that great numbers of Italians who less than a year ago were ready to conciliate the Slavs are not willing to do so now.

The reasons for this change of sentiment may be found in a whole series of unhappy mistakes, committed by representatives of both nations, in the Summer and Fall. The conciliation party in Italy now seems to be greatly diminished, and to have lost such power as it once had; in Jugoslavia the conciliation party has disappeared. On both sides of the Adriatic the extremists are in control, and are being followed by masses of people who are not extremists themselves, but who support the fire-eaters because they think it is the less of two evils.

To find a basis for peaceable settlement will tax the ingenuity of the Peace Commissioners from other nations. Meanwhile, The New Europe suggests as a solution for the question presented by the Italian demand for strategic security—a demand wholly reasonable in itself, but one which has been made to justify some unfortunately excessive claims—"the "neutralization of the whole eastern "coast of the Adriatic, from Trieste to "the Bojana, under the guarantee of the "League of Nations." The Jugoslavs, according to this reasoning, could afford to forego the keeping of a fleet which would naturally be taken as a menace to Italy, and Italy in return could give up her claim to the Dalmatian Islands and part of the Dalmatian coast, inhabited by a great majority of Slavs but dangerous to Italy if held by a naval power.

There is a precedent for an arrangement of this sort, and a precedent which has endured for more than a century with admirable results. By the Rush-Bagot agreement of 1817, Great Britain and the United States agreed to limit their respective naval armaments on the Great Lakes to four vessels of not more than 100 tons, each armed with one 18-pounder gun; and not more than one of them to be stationed in any given lake. The Great Lakes have been free from any public vessels except revenue cruisers for more than a hundred years. We have become so used to it that we do not think it strange, particularly in the friendly relations now obtaining between the two peoples; we are apt to forget that it was made only two years after the close of a war in which the lakes had seen several hotly contested naval battles, and between two nations which at that time were as much "traditional enemies" as Italian and Croats have ever been. It is an example that is worthy at least of respectful consideration by two nations which can only prosper by being friends and only suffer by being enemies.

DEPORTATION.

It has been the policy of the United States, ever since its birth, to foster and welcome immigration. It has been expected that most immigrants would become citizens, and this has been realized; but the alien with no intention of citizenship has met a welcome, too. In his case it has been supposed that he came here to better his condition or for some similarly good reason, and that he was actuated by at least a friendly spirit toward the nation that admitted him and gave him the opportunity. "Uncle Sam is rich enough to give you all a farm" fairly represents the American feeling toward immigrants.

The war, which has taught us so much, has taught us that not all immigrants come here for such purposes as we have imagined, and that not all of them come here with a feeling of friendship for the country. It has taught us that some come here not only with feelings of hostility, but with a preconceived determination to destroy our Government and institutions if they can. It has taught us that from the time they land they are enemies of our institutions, and that whatever may be their form of daily labor their avocation is plotting against them. With some, indeed, it is a vocation, the only vocation they have.

In respect to these aliens it becomes necessary to revise our early American view, now seen to be a somewhat simple-minded one; a view taken from ignorance on our part of certain conditions abroad. Every nation has the right to protect itself, and the right must now be invoked. The restrictions, or supposed restrictions, on the immigration of enemies fail entirely of their purpose. It is of no avail to ask an alien landing in this country if he is an Anarchist. If he is one of the dangerous type he will not admit it, and the only persons excluded are harmless visionaries of the Kropotkin type. Besides, the war has taught us that the most dangerous enemies of republicanism are not Anarchists of any type. Bolshevism, for instance, is flatly opposed to the whole theory of Anarchism. If, to meet these newly revealed conditions, the Anarchist test were abolished and some other word substituted, the new test would be equally easy to evade. This test was put in the immigration laws in the excitement resulting from the murder of President MCKINLEY. It was well intentioned, but it is useless for the purpose for which it was designed.

It is difficult to keep out aliens who come here for the purpose of destroying our Government and wrecking our institutions, because they do not announce their purpose through a megaphone at Ellis Island or Castle Garden. But it is not impossible to deport them when their purpose has been manifested. Attorney General GREGORY has asked Congress to pass a law providing for the deportation of aliens and alien enemies who are recognized as "undesirable residents be"cause they had been ordered to be in"terned," and Representative BURNETT of Alabama has introduced such a bill. It should be passed, but it does not cover the needs of the situation. There are plenty of plotters against our Government who have not been "ordered to be interned." The courts are convicting them right along and sentencing them to imprisonment. But imprisonment is not enough. We do not want them here even as ex-convicts. If the law does not make deportation easy of execution in all such cases it should be amended until it does.

Nor should this be regarded as an additional punishment for these criminals. Their punishment lies in the prison sentence. The deportation at the end of their prison term would presumably inflict no hardship on them, though it is of no consequence whether it does or not; it would be ordered for the protection of the United States Government against their future machinations and conspiracies. Where these people have taken out naturalization papers for the purpose of covering their plots the naturalization should be revoked and the deportation enforced precisely as in the case of those too straightforward or too malevolent to avail themselves of the cloak of citizenship.

THE CABINET IN CONGRESS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

THE NEW YORK TIMES last Sunday performed a valuable public service by printing the letter in which representation of the Cabinet in Congress is advocated. Mr. Hare's arguments are cogent and unanswerable. Under our free institutions the Cabinet of our Chief Executive has deteriorated into the condition of a cabal, responsible to no man but the President. We are in no danger that Woodrow Wilson will abuse the confidence reposed in him, but Presidents may follow who may stand in need of Congressional supervision. The conduct of any Cabinet officer is open to discussion, but the discussion should take place in his presence to give him an opportunity of explanation. Such a policy would be in conformity with the spirit of American fair play and, furthermore, facilitate the progress of public business.

INTERNATIONAL COURTS.

One for American, Another for European Affairs Suggested.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In a recent leader you justly remarked that the American people cannot be expected to abandon the Monroe Doctrine any more than the British can be asked to give up their navy.

I venture to submit, for public consideration, that one of the best means for preserving the Monroe Doctrine would be the establishment of an American International Court for the determination of American international disputes.

This would involve a European International Court for European international questions, and possibly an Asiatic for those arising in the Orient, with a world court for those between nations of different continents. It might be desirable to invest the latter with an appellate jurisdiction over the three others.

I shall not trespass upon your space by urging any argument in favor of such a rather complicated system of international tribunals. But, in my humble judgment, it would not be expedient to have a court sitting in Europe, and composed in the main of Europeans, passing upon purely American issues. President Wilson has suggested the enlargement of the Monroe Doctrine so as to make it applicable to all the nations on earth. Be that as it may, it seems to me that it is for the interest of North and South America alike to confine to the American continent the settlement of American disputes.

MR. ROOSEVELT'S SHORTEST SPEECH.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Among the hundreds of speeches made by Colonel Roosevelt the shortest one occurred as follows: It was during the campaign which made him President. He was speaking from the rear platform of a special train. The engineer, who was running in advance of the schedule of a fast express, had orders to keep his time, no matter who was speaking. The special was running a few minutes late. I had been selected by the committee to introduce Colonel Roosevelt to the crowd at the station. At one place I stepped quickly to the rear platform and found myself facing several thousand people. I said: "Fellow-citizens, I introduce you to your next President. He will live in your hearts forever and pay no rent." Colonel Roosevelt stepped to the platform and said: "Fellow-citizens, I am delighted to see you." "Toot! toot!" sounded the engineer, and we moved quickly on. The Colonel turned to me laughing and said: "That's the shortest speech of my life."

PASSPORTS FOR WOMEN.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Although the "trend of the troops is homeward," it will be many months before those of our men who are serving in the Army of Occupation, in reconstruction units, and attached to the Peace Commission will return. For women, too, work "de secours" is not ended; they are sailing every week to fill numerous vacancies. Yet even to fill a vacancy for which it was difficult to find a woman properly qualified an experienced business woman was refused a passport because her husband was in the military service in France. Before the cessation of hostilities we were told that a man could not fight with wholehearted concentration if he knew that his wife might be in danger; that there was not enough food for those already in France. The men are no longer fighting; there are still positions which must be filled by American women. Why not modify the restriction to permit the married woman particularly qualified for such a position to have an opportunity for service equal to that offered to the woman who has not a husband in the army?

SERVICE IN THE GUARD.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

All boys between 16 and 18 have to take two years' compulsory military training. This may be somewhat of a hardship to the boys who go to business, and may interfere with the boys' pleasure somewhat, but the Military Board has ruled that two years' service in the New York Guard will be accepted and will exempt from any further training. Now, this is splendid news for the boys. They can get into a regiment where they will meet men worth while. They can serve the State, enjoy all the benefits of a crack guard regiment, and be furnished everything free—shoes and uniform—in fact, a complete outfit. Drills are twice a week, (in the evenings,) and the men can be called out for service in the State only. Promotion is rapid and made on merit only. As a member of one of the best New York regiments, I shall be very pleased to give any information to boys between 16 and 18 who will call at my office in the Times Building, Forty-second Street and Broadway, any day except Monday and Saturday.

THE ENVOY OF THE DEAD

(Edith Cavell at the Peace Conference.)

Did a white moth flutter against the window pane?
Did a light wind whisper through the council hall?
The great men looked up, to see if it would come again,
And a listening silence fell upon them all.

Then they seemed to see her, coming with her bandaged eyes;
There was blood upon her dress where her wounds were bare;
So they placed a chair for her, without question or surprise,
For they knew the mighty dead had chosen to send her there.

The mighty Nation of the Dead, who died on land and sea,
And by the rood, you know their wounds, O Christ on Calvary!

They chose her, for she knew them all, soldier and little child—
The girls who in an hour grew old had sent a word by her;
Within her quiet hands she held their wrongs unreconciled—
She led a long procession, like a white-robed crucifer.

And while they spoke of food and trade, she sat and listened, quietly;
And when they spoke of armaments, she had no word to say to them,
But when they spoke of justice, she arose in simple dignity,
Straight as the wooden cross men set outside Jerusalem.

The Prince of Peace Himself has said: "Repentance is the only gate."
There is no devious way to it. The way is narrow and is straight.

The snow fell softly, like white moths against the window pane;
It may be that a little wind went through the council room;
They seemed to see her coming back, to speak with living men again—
The Envoy of the Dead that wait beyond the silence of the tomb!

NO BOLSHEVIKI

A Russian View of Lloyd George's Suggestion to Negotiate With All Factions

By GENERAL A. DOBRJANSKY

IN reply to the question in an article by Harold Williams that appeared in THE NEW YORK TIMES of Jan. 14, in which the English scientist and journalist asks with sorrow what our true, intelligent friends, the Russians, are going to say to the last surprise that they were treated to by Lloyd George, who proposed to open up relations with the Bolsheviki, only one thing can be said: We do not wish to believe that so reputable a statesman as Lloyd George, through his words about joint work with the Bolsheviki, as "representatives of the Russian nation," meant to close a compact with crime. This would be too hideous, too cynical, would be in direct contradiction to the interests of the Russian people, as well as to the reinstallation of civil liberty and the foundation of genuine democratic policy.

We repudiate this idea and wish to see in the words of the British Premier a war ruse, that might enable him to present to the statesmen at the table of the Peace Conference the representatives of the "international criminals," to unveil before them the entire criminality of the ideas of the oppressors, who hold their ephemeral powers by means of terror, dissension, and class and professional hatred, sown and nursed by them.

That is the explanation which might be given by England's genuine friends in Russia. It is impossible to admit that the British policy in the Russian problem, which recently took a firm and decided direction, should have been changed cardinally by embracing the Bolsheviki.

The war in Russia against Bolshevism as a world menace where so much has been lost irrecoverably by the Allies through their lack of truthful information upon the substance of Bolshevism, ought to open the eyes of the Allies at last to the danger that it represents, i. e., the danger of arbitrariness legalized, with anarchy in its wake.

Is not it evident, when we contemplate the last curious document of the Russian Bolsheviki, the note of the Bolshevist Minister of Foreign Affairs Tshitsherin, printed in the official organ of the Soviets, Isvyestiya, that to join hands with such criminals means to become their fellows?

With the usual insolence and lies that are attributes of Bolshevism, Tshitsherin in this note, which runs in th emost contemptuous strain, speaks of the "desperate fight" that the representatives of the Bolsheviki, headed by Trotzky and Tshitsherin himself, fought against "German imperialism at Brest-Litovsk"! Without further dwelling upon this act of treason of the Bolsheviki, Tshitsherin "accuses Wilson" of supporting the Czechoslovak movement for the purpose of "an imperialistic invasion of the Allies in Siberia and the Northern Provinces"!

Notwithstanding all this, the Bolshevist Government expresses its willingness to take part in the Peace Conference in the name of entire Russia.

Moreover, Tshitsherin draws President Wilson's attention to the fact that the Bolsheviki represent "80 per cent. of the Russian nation, which cannot be said of the President of the United States of America."

At the end of his note Tshitsherin declares that if the Bolshevist Government does not receive a reply to this note it will tell the Russian nation that the Allies intend to receive a contribution from the Russian nation and to expropriate their natural resources and to annex their best soil.

Is it admissible to join hands with such men? Is joint work possible for the welfare of the peoples, in the name of democratic principles, with the suppressors of common sense and the foundations of genuine liberty, order, and government?

The English and the allied policy must keep on visible record the merits of Russia at the beginning of the war, when Russia saved Europe, as America did at the end.

It is the duty of the allied policy to help in these hard times the honest Russian people, groaning under the yoke of the Bolsheviki, but not to betray them and the small number of intelligent Russians, delivering them into the hands of arbitrary ruffians.

Its duty is not to make studies and compromises, but to step in indeed as the chastising Themis, whose austere, just, but mainly "speedy" sentence in punishing crime may be considered as the sentinel of the dawn of our young Russian liberty.

THE FARMER'S CAUSE.

His Quarrel with the Middleman and Not the Consumer.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

"A city press that will distort testimony and send false dispatches to outside points, is entitled to the admonition 'Woe unto you, scribes and hypocrites.'" That is not the sentiment of a Bolshevik, an anarchist, or even a socialist. Mr. Burkett of the American Agriculturist said it in the State Capitol in Albany and the 200 farmers from all over the State who were there applauded him and passed a resolution thanking him for the vigorous way he championed the farmer's cause.

The farmers had their inning at the Capitol at the annual meeting at the New York State Agricultural Society. The Dairymen's League was not officially represented, although one of its officers had been given a place on the program on Tuesday afternoon, but the society was heartily in sympathy with the league in its recent campaigns and strike and the society represents many other branches of agriculture besides dairying.

That the farmer and the consumer are friends, not enemies, bound together not only by a community of interests, but by the closest sort of family relationships, was brought out by speaker after speaker, by none more strongly than by Dr. Jonathan C. Day, Mayor Hylan's Commissioner of Milk and Markets. Dr. Day is pastor of an east side church and has spent about half his life on a farm and half as a city minister. He was unusually well able to speak for both sides and he is in a position to speak with force and clearness in favor of the chief contention of all the men who addressed the meeting. When he said that there must be an open channel between the producer and the consumer, a free market place where it would be possible for the city man to get his food without the necessity for paying a profit to the middleman, he said what every farmer heartily indorsed. The one solution urged by speaker after speaker was for the city or the State to own the distribution plants.

There was not a single criticism of the people who object to the high price of milk sold at retail. The Agricultural Society recognized two antagonists, an unfair press and the dealer who for years has exploited the farmer and made all the profit there is in the only essential human food.

When John Y. Gerow, who has been a dairyman for fifty years in Washingtonville, Orange County, and who was an organizer of the Dairymen's League, was given a chance to speak he touched the hearts of every one of the 300 men and women who crowded the Assembly Chamber. He said: "God knows I love a baby, but I will not be driven from my home by so-called philanthropic capitalists. I helped establish a creamery, but the capitalist organizations came and made us either close up or sell to them. I have drawn milk to the creamery and sold forty quarts for 60 cents. I have seen the boys all leaving the farms because capitalist organizations had fixed the wages at which they should work by determining the price of their products. In Orange County there are 4,000 acres of good pasture land without a cow on them, yet when my neighbors ask me 'Shall we sell our cows?' I say 'No.' We will not be driven from our homes nor give up making the milk without which humanity cannot live. After all, patriotism grows strong in homes and the Dairymen's League has kept cows on the hills. It has produced the fat that is essential to man's health, it has made it possible for farmers to exist, and it is keeping the homes in the country open. If we want patriotic citizens we must stand behind the league."

Mr. Gerow closed by saying: "I warn the consumers of New York, I warn the citizens of the State, I warn the Governor, that the day we railroad the officers of the league to prison will be a suicidal day for us in New York."

THE PROBLEM OF SALONIKI

By CHARLES UPSON CLARK

EVERY one realizes that Constantinople offers a difficult problem to the Peace Conference, but few know that Saloniki's fate will be fully as delicate a question, and depends on very complex factors. The great Aegean port has been coveted by Serbia, Bulgaria, Rumania, and even Austria; in fact, Austria's resentment because Serbia had apparently blocked her path to Saloniki, was one of the chief causes of the war. It is therefore necessary that the Peace Commissioners dispose of Saloniki in a manner to satisfy both the Thessalonians themselves and the Balkan countries for which the city must be the port and the entrepôt, and it is highly desirable that we Americans should understand the factors involved.

To Thessalonica the year 1492 was almost as vital as to us Americans; it marks not only Columbus's expedition, but the expulsion of the Jews from Spain. Scores of thousands of these refugees were welcomed by the Grand Turk and distributed among the large cities of his empire, where they became the backbone of the professional classes, the retail shopkeepers, the wholesalers, and the artisans. Large numbers of them settled in Saloniki; they have preserved their language, their worship, and their customs, and even today 65 per cent. of the Thessalonians speak Spanish as their mother tongue, and profess the Hebrew faith. Less than one-third of the population of about 125,000 is Greek; the remainder is Turkish, Serb, Bulgar, &c.

With their commercial talent and their command of one of the western languages, these Spanish Jews made Saloniki the second city of European Turkey and the chief seaport of the Central Balkans. They established a national library; they were just organizing a communal university when the Balkan wars broke out afresh; the Party of Union and Progress had its headquarters here; a Thessalonian Jew was one of the three delegates who announced his deposition to Abdul Hamid. After the fire of 1890 the Jewish commercial and residence quarters were rebuilt so well that the waterfront of the city was the handsomest in Turkey outside of the capital.

Then came the Balkan wars, the world war, and the fire of Aug. 18, 1917—and these Jews who had so successfully followed the advice given by St. Paul to their ancient forebears ("study to be quiet, and to do your own business, and to work with your own hands") were confronted by a series of terrible problems, before which they have almost lost heart. Their city was first invaded by the Greek troops, who got out of hand and looted one of the synagogues, tearing up its "seraphim;" then by the Bulgarians, who, curiously enough, were milder. We do not think of the Bulgarians as a tolerant people, yet we must give them credit for never having given their Turkish citizens cause for umbrage; in the Bulgarian Sobranje sit Turkish Deputies, wearing the fez; but when the first Saloniki Deputies appeared in the Greek Chamber they were greeted with hoots and their fezzes snatched from their heads and torn to pieces!

The first steps of the Greek administration were unfortunate, also. For the mild Turkish tariff was substituted the high-protective régime of Greece, and the Thessalonian importers suffered at once. They found themselves confronted also with a new and formidable competitor—the National Bank of Greece, which not only was authorized to conduct an importing business on its own account, but which was the only agency giving import permits to others; so they had to furnish the Greek National Bank with all details of price, freight rates, &c., in their requests for permits. At the same time taxes were much increased, and the Greek language made obligatory in all Government offices and transactions, and in the schools—that is, the only schools for which the Government turned over money raised by general taxation, were the Greek schools, serving about 20 per cent. of the population.

Then, on a Jewish festival two Summers ago, came the crowning calamity. A great fire broke out in at least four different places; the firemen found the water supply deficient, and when the flames died down the Jewish business and residence quarter was a shell. The Government never issued a satisfactory explanation, and the natural suspicions of the inhabitants were accentuated by the shouts of joy raised in the leading Liberal daily of Athens over the disappearance of the ancient "ghetto of Macedonia." These suspicions were changed to despair when the Government issued the provisions of the so-called Mawson plan for the rebuilding of the city—a plan which the Venizelist Minister of Communications, speaking to the Athens correspondent of the Saloniki Indépendant, frankly characterized as "confiscation, pure and simple." The plan is a specious one and is ostensibly designed to lead to a "City Beautiful," paying no attention to the former street and property divisions; it is, however, significant that it does not touch the crowded, tortuous, and insanitary Turkish and Greek quarters, spared by the fire. It apparently protects the interests of the former property-owners by providing for the issuance to them of bonds to the assessed value of their holdings, on which bonds the bank must lend up to three-quarters of the face, if desired; but as the final disposal of the new plots will be at auction, it is feared that a few millions of Government subvention will freeze out the entire Spanish Jew population.

It is drawing near the end of the second year since the fire, and such of the homeless population as still remain camp out in hovels and in tents and eke out as best they can a scanty existence. The great Jewish organizations, the Greek Government, and latterly the American Red Cross, have been relieving the situation somewhat; but many thousands have already left, and as the Greek Government does not plan to redeem the bonds before December, 1919, many more will leave. Can there be plainer proof that it is not fair to leave any of the great Spanish Jewish centres of the Levant—Saloniki, Constantinople, Smyrna—to a single Balkan Government to administer? Considering besides that Saloniki must be the natural port of Serbia, of much of Albania, and of Bulgarian Macedonia, the only solution would seem to be the internationalization of the city and its administration by a committee or delegate of the League of Nations.

WHERE WAR GOES ON.

The Trouble Among the Poles, Lithuanians, and Ukrainians.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Polish ideals and purposes, as outlined by Polish leaders, are for the formation of a strong and self-dependent Poland—strong in population and extent of territory, but weak politically in pursuit of purpose and lacking cohesiveness. They dream of reconstructing a "historical Poland" only to be compared with the now disrupted Austro-Hungarian Empire.

The best example of Polish imperialistic aims is found in the World's Work issue of December, 1918, and outlined by no less a renowned leader than Ignace Jan Paderewski. Out of Austria, he includes in the future Poland Austrian Silesia, with over 100,000 Czechoslovaks; all of Eastern Galicia and part of Bukowina, with about 4,000,000 Ruthenians or Ukrainians; out of Russia he carves for Poland parts of Podolia and Volhynia, the former Russian Governments of Grodna, Minsk, part of Vitebsk, Courland, all of Kovna, Vilna, and Suvalki. The above-mentioned territories are not Polish, save a few big landowners who are Poles. The addition of the former Russian territory would add to new Poland, as outlined by Mr. Paderewski, some 5,000,000 Ukrainians, over 3,000,000 White Ruthenians, about 500,000 Letts, over 3,000,000 Lithuanians. Add German Poland to this, with about 2,000,000 Germans, then take into account the large Jewish element, and the new Poland of Mr. Paderewski, with a total of about 35,000,000, will have more than half of non-Polish population hostile to the Poles.

The Ukrainians would surely fight for a union with Ukrainia; the Lithuanians would work for independence; the White Ruthenians would gravitate toward a union with their brethren under the Russian sway; the Germans would look toward Germany. Those obeying orders from Warsaw would be in the minority. Such a state could not exist, or, if it were to exist, it would necessitate oppression, accompanied by cruelties, bitter feelings, uprisings, and bloodshed. Such a new Poland would be weak, because she would be unjust.

That this new Poland of present leaders would be founded on oppression bespeak events in Galicia. Murdering of hostile Jews has already taken place; battles with the Ukrainians are going on; hostilities with the Lithuanians have begun; troubles are developing with the Germans; the Czechoslovaks are not too friendly toward imperialistic Poland. There is hardly a Russian who likes Poles in general. Poland on all sides will be surrounded by hostile nations who will work for her destruction and weakening through her oppressed elements. And if we take into account the fact that Poles in foreign areas will be able to dominate only through aristocracy, we will see the dangers that beset the adventure of the imperialistic leaders of new Poland.

Lately dispatches have come from Warsaw which state that the Poles are ready to go to the assistance of the Lithuanians defending their capital, Vilna, against the Russian Bolsheviki. But the army which the Lithuanians hastily formed will not only fight the Bolsheviki but the Polish forces as well. The Lithuanians know that the Poles want to occupy Vilna and Lithuania and later keep them, as "possession is nine-tenths of the law." The Bolsheviki are merely a pretext to occupy Vilna.

One of President Wilson's peace points was the creation of a Poland out of the territory "inhabited by undisputably Polish populations." The Allies agree with this conception. This would eliminate the Ukrainians, the Lithuanians, and all other nations surrounding Poland. But only the Polish leaders do not conceive this just proposition and, temporarily being in a better military position, are trying to impose by force of arms their imperialistic aims on the weaker neighbors at present.

LOYALISTS OF 1776

Their Number and the Part of the Scotch-Irish and South Irish in the Revolution

By MORGAN J. O'BRIEN

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. Justice Russell of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia has at various times addressed interesting letters to THE TIMES upon the subject of the American Revolution, usually dealing, however, with the position of the loyalists and the treatment accorded them by the Republican partisans. He is especially interested in this feature of the case, being himself a descendant of a loyalist. In his letter in THE TIMES of the 12th inst., he protests against a statement in a book written by Mr. Beckles Willson, wherein the author says that "two-thirds of the entire population of America were loyalists." I have no doubt at all, judging from the tone of Justice Russell's letter, that he means to be fair in his criticisms, yet when he characterizes the statement of Mr. Willson as "preposterous," it would seem that his sources of information are limited to those historians who did not themselves consult original records from which exact data on the point are available. In view of this, and in the interests of historic truth only, may I be permitted to present some evidence in support of the statement of Mr. Willson which does not appear in any history of the Revolution?

In the year 1779 a joint committee of the Lords and Commons met in the English Parliament for the purpose of investigating the conduct of the war. Two of the witnesses called before that committee were Joseph Galloway and General James Robertson. In answer to a question as to "the proportion of the Colonists who supported the present rebellion," Galloway testified: "I don't think one-fifth part have supported it"; and further, he said: "from the old attachment, and, I believe, an earnest desire to be united with this country, (England,) I venture to say that many more than four-fifths of the people prefer a union with Great Britain upon constitutional principles to that of independence." The Secretary of War introduced General Robertson to the committee as "the most competent witness to testify on American affairs" because of "his long experience and twenty-four years' residence in America and his high and deserved rank in the service," and in answer to a question by Lord George Germain, Robertson said: "More than two-thirds of the people would prefer the King's Government to the Congress's tyranny." A full account of the Galloway testimony can be seen in Rivington's New York Gazette of the months of September, October, and November, 1779, and the whole testimony, word for word, of both witnesses may be found in the Parliamentary Register or Debates in the House of Commons, (London, 1779,) this being the official channel through which the Government published the evidence given at the inquiry.

Justice Russell will hardly contend that these men were not competent witnesses or that they were not in a position to know the disposition of the people on the question of separation from England. Galloway was particularly well qualified to testify, having been one of the leading lawyers in the Colonies and Speaker of the Pennsylvania Assembly for twelve years, and the opportunities he possessed of obtaining information, as shown by his testimony, the facts stated by him, and the prominence with which his views were published made his "examination" a document of much importance at the time. And that this was not merely off-hand testimony is shown by Galloway's letters to the Earl of Dartmouth, Secretary of State, dated Philadelphia, Jan. 31, and March 4, 1778, when he was Superintendent of Police of Philadelphia, in which he said that "four-fifths of the Colonists were opposed to the rebellion." I submit that testimony such as this should be considered "the last word on the subject," and that the ex-parte statements of historians on the point bear no weight whatever.

Justice Russell also refers to certain revolutionary patriots of South Carolina as "Scotch-Irish from Ulster." I beg to take exception to this racial description of these people, because there is no justification whatever for so describing the immigrants from Ireland who took so valiant a part in the achievement of our independence, not only in the Carolinas but in all parts of the Colonies. Of course, I know it to be the general impression that the immigrants from Ireland in Colonial days were the "Scotch-Irish" element only, but there is indisputable evidence to the contrary. While no statistics were kept in those days showing the relative numbers of emigrants who left the various parts of Ireland, there is a means of determining the figures with reasonable accuracy, since in numerous cases the newspapers reported the number of immigrants arriving on the different ships. I have made a careful analysis of the Custom House records of the two chief ports of entry, New York and Philadelphia, and have also examined the newspapers during the twenty years preceding the Revolution, in addition to which the land and court records, the parish registers, the records of the offices of the Registrars of Wills and Deeds, and other similarly reliable sources, are of considerable aid in determining the approximate numerical strength of the various racial elements composing the population of the Colonies.

If the immigrants from Ireland were the so-called "Scotch-Irish," it would be natural to suppose that the vessels in which they came sailed from the ports of Ulster, and that, in view of the primitive traveling facilities of the time, the majority of the immigrants were from that section of Ireland. But, as a matter of fact, I find that the greatest number of vessels recorded as arriving from Ireland during the twenty years prior to the Revolution were from Cork and Dublin and other parts of Ireland, where a "Scotch-Irishman" was as rare as an oasis in the most arid part of the Sahara. And, taking them all in all, I find that exactly 33 per cent. of the vessels sailed from Ulster ports and 67 per cent. from the other ports of Ireland.

To quote but one example of the large Irish emigrations before the Revolution, I find in The Pennsylvania Gazette of Aug. 11, 1773, an account from Dublin stating that "upward of 18,000 people had left that port during the first six months of 1773 "to settle in various parts of America," and at the New York Historical Society there is a letter from Charles Lee, afterward second in command of the Continental Army, to one Constantine Pope of London, stating that "in the year 1774 12,000 Irish immigrants had arrived in the Delaware River. Thus we see that during a period of eighteen months upward of 30,000 Irish immigrants settled in the American Colonies, none of whom are described as "Scotch-Irish." From the newspaper accounts of the number of "passengers and servants" arriving from Irish ports I have made an average of the numbers on each ship, and when I apply these figures to the total number of vessels from Ireland I find that approximately 33,000 came from the Province of Ulster and 88,400 from all other parts of Ireland during the period 1763 to 1774!

Having arrived at these figures, I examined the names on the muster-rolls of the various bodies of men raised in defense of the Colonies, and in numerous cases also the enlistment papers which show the "countries of nativity" of the men. From these sources I determined, on a most conservative computation, that 38 per cent. of the Revolutionary forces were either of Irish birth or were American-born sons of Irish immigrants! And the names clearly show that the majority were of old Irish stock. If, as is asserted by so many historians, the Scotch-Irish became such patriotic Americans and that they acquired their patriotism from the Scotch end of the hyphen, how do those historians account for the fact that the Scotch themselves steadfastly remained faithful to the Crown? And is it not a fact that Jefferson's original draft of the Declaration of Independence contained a reference to "the Scotch mercenaries" sent over to fight the Americans, but that it was stricken out in deference to the Scotch patriot, John Witherspoon?

ITALIANS AND JUGOSLAVS

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In a recent issue of THE TIMES, Rainer F. Hlacha, Director of the Jugoslav Information Bureau, joins issue with Colonel Pizzarello on the Italian-Jugoslav question. "I think," he says, "that history and ethnology are practical sciences based on facts, and not a matter of scholastic sophistry for the sake of supporting a preconceived cherished idea. The historical facts are:

"Since the times of the migration of the people the Slavs have populated the whole of Dalmatia and wherever else they are to be found today. The Republic of Venice conquered the Dalmatian coast towns in 1420, and the remainder of Dalmatia in 1718, with the exception of Ragusa, which remained an independent trade republic even after the downfall of Venice. * * * Dalmatia has always been Slav. Because the people on the coast were at one time in touch with Venice they used the Italian language and sent their sons to Italy."

Are the historical facts such as represented by Mr. Hlacha? We can get the correct answer if we consult some authority which may reasonably be assumed to be unbiased and is within reach of any one who wants to find out the truth. In his article on Dalmatia in the Encyclopaedia Britannica (Volume VII., Page 774, Eleventh Edition, 1910) Kingsley Garland Jayne says:

"The great Slavonic migration into Illyria, which wrought a complete change in the fortunes of Dalmatia, took place in the first half of the seventh century. In other parts of the Balkan Peninsula these invaders—Serbs, Croats, or Bulgars—found little difficulty in expelling or absorbing the native population. But here they were baffled when confronted by the powerful maritime city-states, highly civilized and able to rely on the moral, if not the material, support of their kinsfolk in Italy. Consequently, while the country districts were settled by the Slavs, the Latin or Italian population flocked for safety to Ragusa, Zara, and other large towns, and the whole country was thus divided between two frequently hostile communities. * * * Bosnia, Serbia, and Bulgaria had each its period of national greatness, but remained intellectually backward; Dalmatia failed ever to attain political or racial unity, but the Dalmatian city-states, isolated and compelled to look to Italy for support, shared perforce in the march of Italian civilization."

It thus appears, contrary to Mr. Hlacha's statement, that:

1. The coast towns of Dalmatia were never absorbed by the Slavs and never lost their Italian character and civilization.

2. They always regarded the Italians as their kinsfolk, and used the Italian language long before they were in touch with Venice.

These are the cities which Italians everywhere have always considered as a part of the "terre irredente" and for whose liberation from the hated yoke of the Hapsburgs they have fought with might and main for three years, at enormous sacrifices of blood and treasure. Why in the world should Italy be deprived of these cities, which historically and culturally belong to her, is hard to understand. The inhabitants of the country districts are mainly Slavs. But is this reason enough for denying the seaboard centres like Zara, Sebenico, Trau, and Spalato, with their Italian population and superior civilization, the right to join their mother country? There are at present 87 per cent. of Germans in Alsace-Lorraine, and Germans there will be in New Poland and Czechoslovakia, and Magyars in the new Rumania. This mixture of races can hardly be avoided, and will require the most tactful handling at the peace settlement.

Liberal-minded Italians concede that an understanding, a "modus vivendi," is not merely desirable but necessary with the Jugoslavs on the question of Dalmatia. But so long as the Jugoslavs and their friends try to cloud the issue with the "secret treaty" bugaboo, so long as they pursue their policy of hatred and provocation and continue their press campaign of falsehood and defamation, so long will conciliation be impossible and Italians of every shade of opinion will be a unit in demanding that the stipulations of the treaty of London be carried out to the letter. Italy is not going to be scared by any such threat as that of Dr. M. R. Vesnitch, the Serbian Minister to France, whose only effect will be to widen the chasm between the Serbian and Italian people just when they should do their best to get together and work out a plan for the protection of their respective rights and interests.

JOSEPH LODATO.

New York, Jan. 9, 1919.

President Wilson as Arbiter.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The Jugoslav-Italian dispute stands like an ominous shadow across the path of future peace and freedom in Europe. The Italians are insisting upon the execution of the secret Treaty of London, concluded without any consent of the people concerned, ceding to Italy the provinces on the eastern coast of the Adriatic, inhabited by the Jugoslavs. The Jugoslavs opposed that treaty because the ceding to Italy of those territories would imperil their national freedom, would mutilate their unity and hamper their economic development. On the eastern Adriatic coast the Italian population is represented only by settlements of tradesmen and merchants grouped in towns and commercial ports among a dense Slav population inhabiting those shores since the sixth century, A. D.

The Italian argument in defense of her imperialistic claims is only a repetition of German argument against the Slavs. The Austrians argued that they had nothing against the Croats, whom they loved and trusted, but they wished to coerce the unruly and barbaric Serbs. The Italians say they admire the heroic Serbs but they wish to control the suspicious and unruly Croats. The Austrians did not succeed in separating the Croats from the Serbs in the common struggle for national freedom, and most surely the Italians will fail to drive a wedge between the branches of the Jugoslavs. The Austrians proclaimed that they wanted to control Serbia as a hotbed of Russian intrigue. The Italians claim the right to control Croatians, alleging that they are the Austrians' catspaw. A year ago the German Kaiser boasted that he had restored German kultur in the Baltic Provinces. The Italians, claiming "the full fruits of their victory," demand to rule Dalmatia in the name of Italian civilization against the barbaric Slavs. Today the Lettish peasantry allied with Bolshevism is burning the castles of German Baltic barons because to them they are the symbols of oppression and foreign exploitation. The same fate awaits the Italian minorities if they oppose the Slavs' freedom and unity. In denying to the Slavs the right of self-government and claiming for themselves the sole right of control over the Adriatic the Italians stand for the old principle of exclusion and competition against the new and higher principle of co-operation among the nations, proclaimed by America and sincerely adopted by the Jugoslavs. Thus the Italian action is in contradiction to the higher principle of modern civilization, whereas the Slavs are defenders of the new order of the things which ought to dawn in Europe as a price for enormous sacrifices sustained by all nations.

Again today, as on the eve of the great war, the Jugoslavs, in order to avoid the hostilities and preserve the peace of Europe, are ready to settle the dispute with imperialistic Italy by referring it to an impartial court of arbitration. We propose that President Wilson, in the name of the American Nation, should act as the arbiter on the basis of the principles solemnly proclaimed by himself. In order to insure the impartiality of President Wilson's decision, it is necessary that Italian troops now in the occupation of the disputed territories should be replaced by American. That a committee appointed by President Wilson should investigate the problems on the spot and report to him. We, the Jugoslavs, accept his decision. If the Italians refuse that, we, the united Jugoslavs, will meet their aggression in the same way as we have met the Austrian attack. The responsibility for the consequences of it we leave to that group of Italian politicians who have nothing learned and nothing forgotten during this great war, but insist upon the pound of Jugoslav flesh as agreed by an immoral secret treaty.

HUDSON TUNNELS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Reading your editorial article on "A Hudson Tunnel for Vehicles" suggests why not a tunnel for freight, with freight subways in the city, to convenient points in the wholesale and manufacturing districts, along the waterfront and to other convenient points. Such construction would, of course, be very expensive, but the saving would also be great, the saving in the cost of freight deliveries, the elimination of lost time in such deliveries and the relieving of traffic congestion in certain parts of the city, the relief from harbor congestion and adverse weather condition interference with harbor traffic, would all mount up the large saving in cost and time of delivery of freight in the city. Freight depots could be located at convenient points, from which freight would be delivered to the consumer with the shortest possible haulage by truck, thus effecting a great saving in cost and time. A freight subway could be constructed along the waterfront for delivery of export freight direct to the docks of the steamships; in fact, cars could be elevated to the dock level and run out on dock tracks to the most convenient point for loading or unloading for shipment.

There is ample room on the "Jersey Flats" to construct, at moderate cost for right of way, tracks connecting all railroads with a central freight yard, where the freight could be sorted and cars rerouted via the nearest subway freight depot to their destination in the city. Broken car lots, odd packages, &c., could be unloaded and their contents sorted for transfer on subway freight cars to the proper subway freight depot in the city.

Weather conditions would not bother, long and expensive truck haulage would be avoided, the heavy traffic congestion at the ferries and many other points would be largely eliminated, as well as harbor crowding. Large concerns on the lines of the freight subways could have their private switches or sidings for the receipt of freight direct into their establishments.

The project could be financed and constructed in three ways: (1) By the city as a city utility that would earn a revenue; (2) by private capital relying for profits on charges for terminal delivery of freight; (3) by the railroads pooling their issues or financing a "union railroad and terminal" company.

There would be no obstruction of the river and of shipping by bridges, freight would be delivered to many points in the city, all railroads supplying New York would have equal facilities for delivering freight, and the city would be removed from its insular position so far as freight was concerned.

STATE SUPREME COURT REFORM

By ADOLPH J. RODENBECK, Justice of the Supreme Court, Rochester.

The Supreme Court of the State of New York is in the grip of a statutory procedure and is under a legislative thralldom.

Ever since the adoption of our present practice there has never been a time when the Supreme Court was a free agent to carry out the jurisdiction and powers vested in it by the Constitution. The Constitution has vested the Supreme Court with general jurisdiction in law and equity and yet the Supreme Court has little to say how that authority shall be exercised.

The Legislature not only has assumed to prescribe to the minutest detail how the decisions of the Supreme Court shall be arrived at, but has presumed to authorize it to adopt rules of court as though the Legislature were placed in tutelage over that court.

The code of civil procedure with its tangled mass of substantive and adjective law and its maze of procedure has tied the Supreme Court, hand and foot, and is largely responsible for any criticism made against the administration of justice.

The Legislature seeks not only to prescribe the substantive rights of litigants so far as it can do so, but endeavors to control as well the procedural rights of parties.

It not only makes the laws, but seeks also to control their interpretation and enforcement by prescribing the procedure by which controversies shall be decided.

In a complicated case a party is not in a position to enforce an early trial on account of the numerous separate motions and appeals therefrom that are possible under a practice foisted on the Supreme Court by the Legislature having no responsibility for the administration of justice.

Litigants are given procedural as well as substantive rights by the Legislature, neither of which the courts have any authority to ignore or modify, except where a discretion is vested in the court, which discretion it often possesses without any delegation from the Legislature.

A party may be turned out of court as formerly under the common law practice because he has not entered the courtroom by the right door and must be sent out, often with the penalty of costs, to enter by another door.

The practice has been made as complicated as it could be made by the Legislature and procedure in the Supreme Court has been made a fine art which few have the skill or patience to acquire.

The poor litigant is not on even terms with his rich opponent in difficult cases because of the delays that are possible under "the nice sharp quillets of the law" afforded by the Legislature.

Human judgment upon substantive rights in complicated cases is sufficiently uncertain without adding to it the uncertainty of rulings upon questions of mere procedure.

Under our legislative practice "the glorious uncertainty of the law" may indeed become "of mair use to the Professors than the justice of it" and the claimant "may expire of wrong in the midst of right as mariners die of thirst in the midst of water."

"Justice," said Webster, "is the greatest interest of man on earth," and yet in this State it has been hampered and retarded by a legislative procedure which makes procedure nearly if not quite as important as justice itself.

Justice under our practice must be obtained in one way—by a legislative straitjacket procedure or not at all.

In those parts of the State where the Supreme Court is not behind in its calendar, ordinary cases may be promptly brought to trial, but even in those portions of the State in difficult cases, and in other portions of the State where the court is not abreast of its business, there is often an exemplification of the saying of Gladstone that "justice delayed is justice denied."

The present system of a legislative practice is one of indirect control of the Supreme Court by the Legislature.

It is a survival of the idea that the Legislature must participate in the administration of justice, as it did when the Senators were members of the Court of Errors. It is only a step in the progress from the ancient methods of trial out of which the jury system finally developed, and is an exemplification of a mechanical system of trial as against a rational system in which procedure will be subordinated to justice.

The time has arrived for the emancipation of the Supreme Court from this legislative slavery and its deliverance from these procedural shackles that have interfered with the free course of justice.

This can be accomplished not by a more legislative sleight-of-hand shuffling of sections of the code of civil procedure and a shifting of its provisions from one place to another, but by a restoration of the power of the Supreme Court to transact its own affairs and a return to the true spirit of the Constitution with respect to the administration of justice.

The substantive law should be separated from the practice, and the latter should be regulated in the Supreme Court by that court as the Constitution contemplates.

The Legislature has experimented on the subject of the procedure in the Supreme Court for over seventy years, with results yearly growing worse, and there is no encouragement in the past to continue that experience in the future.

The Legislature has a field quite as important and sufficiently large in the enactment of substantive law, and should keep its hands off the Supreme Court and permit it to discharge its constitutional duty without undue interference from the legislative branch of the Government.

If the Legislature will relegate to the statutes the substantive law in the present code of civil procedure and enact a short practice act regulating such matters as are deemed of such fundamental importance as to partake of a substantive character, the Supreme Court may then adopt suitable rules to restore the administration of justice to its fullest usefulness.

The practice in that court should be so elastic that such quasi-judicial matters as are now intrusted to administrative bodies may be as promptly adjusted in that court as by a separate tribunal. It should be so liberal that all justiciable questions may be determined as speedily and as easily as in the lower courts. It should be so general that the attention of the bench and bar will be diverted from the subject of procedure to that of the substantive law of the case and so that the eyes of the court may ever be directed to that greatest end of the administration of the law, "justice, justice, justice."

There must be an emancipation of the Supreme Court from the legislative thralldom of a statutory practice to accomplish this result and this can be done by vesting in that court the power to make its own rules in accordance with the authority and spirit of the Constitution.

MAKING GERMANY PAY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your editorial entitled "Estimating the Indemnity," you say:

We have an easy way of estimating what Germany can pay, and we shall have to adopt a sure method instead of preaching demands based merely on what we would like to get. Germany's debt is about $35,000,000,000. The interest on that at 5 per cent. would be $1,750,000,000. Therefore we know that Germany herself believes she can pay $1,750,000,000 per year.

You are doubtless right in your main idea, that is, that there is a limit to what Germany can pay; but I am not convinced of the justness of your method of fixing that limit.

Let me make use of an analogy. Suppose a certain rich man had committed an irreparable wrong to another man, involving the death of the victim's children and the destruction of his property, worth, let us say, $1,000,000. Suppose the rich man had $1,500,000, some productive as bonds, some unproductive as his residence, art treasures, &c., and that his income is $50,000 a year.

Now would you consider it just if a court should decide that as the culprit's income was only $50,000 a year and as he needed most of that for his living expenses it was impossible that he should pay an indemnity of a million dollars? Do you think the court should direct the victim to be satisfied with one-quarter of his property loss and to expect nothing for the murder of his children?

I think not. I think any reasonable judge would order the man to sell his stocks, his art treasures, and his residence if necessary to pay for the destruction he had caused.

The cases are not unlike. Let Germany pay for the damage done to French coal and iron mines by the cession, for a term of years or forever, of her own coal and iron mines. Let her replace the machinery, art treasures and household goods of Belgium, France, and Serbia with similar articles from her own factories, museums, and homes. Let her give of her manhood for the restoration of the buildings in the occupied territories as she gave of her manhood for their destruction. Germany has deposits of potash of great value. Let these be worked for a term of years by an English company with German labor and apply the proceeds on the indemnity demand by Great Britain. In like manner let all the natural resources of Germany be exploited for the benefit of the invaded countries.

And when these things are done, let the German people groan and sweat for twenty years or so under a burden of taxes, until every last dollar is paid. Let this go down in history as a stern example of what happens to a nation as to an individual who takes up arms against all the laws of God and man and enters his neighbor's house to rob, ruin, and destroy.

CIVIL WAR POEMS

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Within the decade following immediately upon the civil war not less than eleven respective claimants as authors of "Dixie" had arisen in various parts of the country. It was this impossible situation which had tempted to a definite investigation into the true origin, &c.; of that composition, but with no design of going further. But incidental correspondence from unexpected sources gradually drew the research into considerable of the extensive area of apocraphal authorship. For example, a writer mailed to me a printed copy of "I Am Dying, Egypt, Dying," with the name of "General Lytle" attached as its author. The same cover contained a verbatim copy of the same poem, printed, and excised from the correspondent's scrapbook, which antedated Lytle's claim by ten full years. No inquiry was undertaken into this discrepancy.

I also encountered in the newspapers three persons who severally claimed to have composed "Rock Me to Sleep, Mother." But as I also came upon two versions of the song, and there might have been three, that matter was not pursued.

One of the best products among civil war poems was entitled "Stonewall Jackson's Way." This was found upon the body of a dead Confederate private soldier and appeared in a Northern newspaper of the period. It was unsigned, and no one has ever publicly professed to have written it. Efforts were vainly made even to synchronize its origin through the incidental reference in the text to Longstreet. The allusion was, of course, to General Longstreet after the latter, in the late Summer of 1862, had become a real "commander" and was assigned to the first of the three corps constituting Lee's army, the third of which (the left) was assigned to General Jackson. Jackson died on May 10, 1863, and as there had been no army engagements within the interval mentioned when Jackson, according to the song, had helped Longstreet "hemmed in at the gorge," or words to that effect, an affectionate desire to determine, if nothing better, as to the approximate date of origin of the poem had to remain unaccomplished.

The poem of the war, on the Southern side, was, par excellence, James R. Randall's "Maryland, My Maryland," and its title was never attempted upon by a pretender; for Randall, whom I intimately knew, survived through many years of robust usefulness and would have handled his own cudgels.

The only truly remarkable experience marking several years of inquiry into certain claims by putative authors was that attending an effort to fix the correct status among writers of the familiar poem of 1861, "All Quiet Along the Potomac." This work grew from the wording of a standing newspaper paragraph appearing with monotonous and daily regularity while the Confederate Army, then under Joseph E. Johnston (having been named in special orders at Fairfax as "The Army of the Potomac") occupied Munson's and Mason's hills in the Fall of 1861, and picketed the banks of that stream.

The poem was written by Lamar Fontaine, but no less than four others set up separate titles to it. For one thing, this writer knew Lamar Fontaine; and, for another thing, he knew that Fontaine had composed the ver (which was not a classic, indeed, but popular.) So the contest was begun, to authenticate Lamar's rightful title. This had involved time and compelled some warmth of correspondence. But the right prevailed.

Imagine the consternation years later at receiving from a professed relative of Fontaine a rather curt announcement that Lamar Fontaine was at that writing present with the said relative, (somewhere in Pennsylvania,) and that "Lamar Fontaine utterly denied having had anything to do with 'All Quiet Along the Potomac!'" And the "relative" added his own ipse dixit in corroboration. Obviously, the third person had no other recourse than docile silence under such a contradiction! But—

Soon after the Spanish war the United States Government purchased for collective preservation to history all of the lyrical products of the Confederacy it could find which had been popular in the civil war. The matter was difficult to obtain and was widely scattered, whatever of it had survived. A music publisher in Savannah, Ga., named Henry Shriner announced as having in his possession nearly a complete assortment of the material the Government was after, and, more to the point, they were "the original prints" of the songs. His entire stock was taken at an agreed price. The third piece of sheet music on Shriner's list contained this on the title page: "All Quiet Along the Potomac. Words by Lamar Fontaine."

READY-TO-SERVE DINNERS FOR HOSTESSES

Ready-to-Serve Maids Accompany Community Service When Desired, and Marketing is Done by Specialists for Other Busy Housekeepers

"WE'LL have dinner out of the kettle if you can stay," casually remarked the hostess.

What that sort of dinner might be was entirely beyond her manly guest. However, he believed in taking chances, so he accepted the invitation quite as casually, only to see his hostess retire for a few brief minutes and reappear to set before him a full-fledged meal—soup, meat, vegetables, a salad, and dessert. He ate and was satisfied and, containing his mystification no longer, demanded to see the magic pail.

There it was, a high, enameled affair with various intricate compartments on its inside and a cheerful charcoal fire burning away in a pan at the very bottom. In it had arrived the roast chicken, the soup, and a steaming hot pudding, while in a sister pail, much smaller in size, had come the salad packed with ice.

The hostess, thrilled with her newfound means of being domestic though a money earner, went on to explain the every-day working system of the community meal service. She purchased, it seemed, a book of seven tickets, each good for a single meal. Then, when each dinner was delivered, she forfeited a ticket and ordered, from the menu presented by the delivery boy, her dinner for the following day. She was not told, by reason of any creeping sense of economy, to those meals only, for unless she ordered them she need not pay for them, and as late as 3 o'clock in the afternoon she might call up the kitchen and cancel her dinner for that night.

It was nothing short of a godsend in her life, she insisted, for, since she worked all day in a downtown office and necessarily must swallow her lunch in the middle of a howling mob, she felt at night the urgent need of peace and quiet. She was much too tired to cook her own dinners, and she was much too busy to oversee the unskilled services of the ordinary obtainable maid. Therefore she praised unceasingly the powers that provided this happy solution to her domestic problems.

For years we have heard faint murmurings of community kitchens, but though the story sounded well to weary housekeepers and to jaded restaurant patrons, until recently the scheme never seemed to work out in a particularly efficient manner. Whenever a community idea took on form and substance it was likely, for one reason or another, to look ridiculous. The right people, experienced in the work undertaken, never seemed to be the ones in charge. But now, if anything can be judged from results, specialists have undertaken the supervision of this all-important organization, and it is actually working out to the extreme satisfaction of those who depend upon its success.

At the base of operations, where the dinners are cooked, served, and distributed, everything is organized under the most up-to-date laws of cleanliness and wholesomeness. The dinners are planned on the principle of balanced rations, so that one is sure of being provided with all the necessary food elements.

Each day, early in the morning, the delivery wagon leaves the kitchen on the errand of collecting all outstanding food containers. One of the blessings of this service is that the customer is under no obligation to wash the receptacle which brings the dinner to the door. It is collected in just the state it was left after the dinner was served, and then it is cleansed at headquarters quite in accordance with the rest of the sanitary arrangements there.

The object of the managers of these community kitchens is to provide the meals with the minimum amount of effort for those who are served. The work of filling the containers starts in at about 6 o'clock, and then the dinners are delivered as near the time requested by the customer as is possible.

All this sounds very well where one or two persons are concerned, but what about a larger number of people? Well, whole families have enjoyed ready delivered dinners. There are times in any neighborhood when the best privately established maid service will fail to pieces, and there have been known families who have failed altogether on this side of their domestic life. They are only too willing to avail themselves of the community cooking force, and many is the tired housekeeper who has thanked her lucky stars that such a course was available.

Specially cooked dinners are another triumph of the community kitchen thoroughly organized as a service for the people of the neighborhood. A customer explains that some very extra special guests are expected and what can be done to give them the best that the market affords? The resourceful manager then plans out a dinner de luxe, she has it cooked and served and sent right at the appointed hour. Added to which she stands ready to send along with it two maids properly capped and aproned who will serve the dinner, clear away the dishes, wash them, and silently steal away.

The community maid, highly trained to her particular duties, goes out from her central office in answer to your call. You can have her for an hour whenever you want her, or you can have her for an hour or two regularly every day, or you can have her come only at dinner time or luncheon time or whenever the need arises in your own domestic arrangements. For an isolated hour the charge is somewhat larger in proportion than for the same hour regularly every day, and the more hours you are willing to contract for the less you will have to pay per hour for the service.

A great boon to the young married people of any neighborhood lies in the possibility of being able to secure some one to look after the children while their parents are away at the theatre or dinner in the evenings. An unexpected invitation, a telephone call, and it is possible for the hitherto pentup parents of babies to accept without a qualm.

Out of the community kitchen idea has developed a wholesale marketing scheme which is being conducted by one enterprising woman. Early each morning she calls up her patrons, who are usually those with large families and the responsibility of providing three meals a day. She takes the order for all the necessary provisions for that day—meat, fruit, vegetables, and any other thing that it is possible to secure at a central market. Then, after all of her orders are assembled, she proceeds to Washington Market, where her purchasing is carried on, and from this point her deliveries are made to each separate family as ordered.

The charge for this service is a small percentage of the total bill, and the advantages are almost too numerous to mention. In the first place, the huge market affords all sorts of choice and the freshest of everything sold. The prices there are way below those charged by dealers in what are known as the expensive neighborhoods of the city, and then the possibility of having one's provisions selected by some one who has made a study of conditions and values is of inestimable worth to the harassed housekeeper.

Another recent development of the community idea lies in the service of finding and renting apartments for inquiring tenants. So many of the neighborhood's inhabitants gather from time to time in the confines of this modern village store that the manager is automatically kept in touch with existing conditions in that direction. She can juggle the apartment situation to the Queen's taste, for she holds the magic key. She knows who is renting furnished and who wants to rent unfurnished. She knows where a subletting proposition can be found at a bargain, and she knows in what direction to steer the one who must sublet in a hurry, but who pines to have strictly nice people for her tenants. It looks as though the outcome of all this will be that popular renting bureaus will be right in the community centre.

And now the housewife can sidestep the necessity of replanning her whole domestic regime and turn it over to a central expert association. She faces the problem of an eight-hour day for servants. She has never known anything of this character. How shall she adjust things to this latest demand from the servants? She need not adjust. She need only ask her nearest community organization to submit to her a working scheme, and all will be well.

It is quite evident that this utopian scheme has not as yet worked out in all the details of its perfection, but the beginning—and a really efficient and satisfactory beginning—has been made. It only remains for the housekeeper to educate herself to the new turn of events—for her to accept this new basis of operation, and things will work along much more smoothly, until some day a wide-eyed housewife will inquire whether things were ever done differently and how under the sun people managed when they were.

ASTONISHES THE EAST.

Remarkable Growth of the Commercial Interests of the Philippines.

Twenty years ago the Philippine Archipelago was a negligible factor in international trade, so far as the leaders in foreign commerce in that part of the world were concerned. About that time it was that the islands reverted, by the fortunes of war, to the control of the United States. The dolce far niente policies of Spain no longer governed after that. Half-naked natives—savages they were called—came under the influence of an enlightened Government. By example and by practice the Filipinos were taught of the possibilities within themselves if education and training were given rein.

Those who at first were our enemies in the Philippines have become our friends. Public schools have been established and the younger generation and many of the older people have awakened to a new national and business life. Industries that did not exist have been established and commerce has come out to and come in from the larger and more immediate foreign nations to an amazing extent when the short period of the transition, only twenty years, is considered.

Our Philippines are now competing as an exporter of staple products with, or buying largely from, Australia, with the Dutch and British East Indies and with China and Japan in a number of directions, and, under a higher civilization, importing from the United States and other countries to supply wants which, under the old Philippine régime, did not exist.

As a consequence, notably, of the very large increase in its exports and imports for the fiscal year ended June 30, which one finds the trade news bulletins of the Far East paying especial attention to the progress made by our transpacific archipelago. Indeed, it has become a trade competitor to be reckoned with by all the other large exporting countries on the other side of the Pacific and adjacent thereto.

Philippine foreign trade in the last fiscal year reached an unparalleled value and exceeded the figures of the previous year by more than 60 per cent. The price test, of course, is hardly a true one, as quotations have advanced so much, but there are many instances of trade movement which are indicated by quantities, and it is clear that there has been a marked increase in volume handled, accompanied by great activity, and that the islands had a distinctly prosperous year.

Total imports amounted to $83,763,000, a gain of $32,000,000, half of it in cotton cloths and miscellaneous iron and steel. Imagine any such shipments to that extent to the Philippines twenty years ago!

Over 80 per cent. of these imports came from the United States, and of the remainder Japan sent a considerable quantity. Flour imports were a million dollars larger, but a part of these were from Australia, because of disturbance to shipping conditions. Previously this flour came from America. More fresh beef is being bought from China now. Formerly it went to the Philippines from Australia, but here shipping, or, rather, the lack of it, prevented. The once crude inhabitants of the islands bought, for them, rather freely last year also of laces, embroidery, jewelry, and automobiles.

Exports for the first time passed the hundred-million-dollar mark, rising to $116,614,000, which was double the prewar total. The increase over 1917 was about $45,000,000. Hemp and cocoanut products were the leading factors, demand for the former having been greatly stimulated by the war. Cocoanut production assumed enormous proportions when copra and oil product are considered. The island sugar industry fell away a little, owing to lack of transport tonnage. The cigar trade abroad increased nearly 50 per cent., with 70 per cent. of the export total coming to the United States. Unmanufactured tobacco exports established a new record, both as to quantity and price. After these came shipments of cordage and embroideries of Philippine manufacture, which are said to be growing in popularity here.

In short, with all the growth of Philippine foreign trade the commercial independence of the United States and the islands is as marked as anything else.—Newark News.

WHAT'S THE MATTER WITH THE Y. M. C. A.?

Criticism of Organization's Work Traced to Basic Conflict in Religious Beliefs as Between Workers and Soldiers

BY W. W. GREGG.

THE Y. M. C. A. is under fire, and the attacks now being made upon it seem likely to prove more harmful than its baptism of real fire at the front prior to the armistice. But to the lasting credit of both the association and its personnel it must never be forgotten that they were at the front, that so many of its men there shared the dangers and hardships of the soldiers to whom they ministered and that some of its men there laid down their lives, not as combatants in the ecstacy of battle, but in the more prosaic rôle of supplying cheer and comfort to the fighters.

And yet now that the fighting is past, repeated mutterings of dissatisfaction with this same organization are heard, which, however much they may be discounted, surely cannot all be ignored as attributable to the ignorance or prejudice or thoughtlessness either of the enlisted men or of the Y. M. C. A. worker.

Numerous explanations and analyses of this dissatisfaction have been suggested, and in all fairness it must be stated that the Y. M. C. A. itself has been quick to investigate and answer in good spirit all criticisms made. Undoubtedly the assumed causes of many of these criticisms are either non-existent or grossly exaggerated or largely due to situations over which the Y. M. C. A. had no control. Undoubtedly the cause of certain other criticisms are traceable to an unfortunate selection of the personnel of the association, especially for its overseas work, but in part due to the very limited time available in which to expand its organization sufficiently to handle the tremendous work abroad.

But after making all allowances for these matters, which are being and will be fully discussed both by hostile and friendly critics and by the Association itself, is there not still left a residuum of fair criticism which is not explainable along any of the foregoing lines, a criticism which necessarily goes to the very root and being of the organization itself and which can always be made of the Y. M. C. A. in army work simply because it is a Young Men's Christian Association?

Of course the organization can hardly be expected to admit the validity of any such argument as here suggested. With its traditions and long history of usefulness in civic life both in religious and social fields, it may naturally resent any implication that it is in any respect fundamentally unequal to the very complex task of ministering to all the religious and social needs of the man at the front. But sometimes an outsider has a clearer appreciation of the merits of a controversy than a participant, and so in the present controversy between the Y. M. C. A. and its critics it may be helpful to look at the situation from an outsider's viewpoint, to try to discover if possible whether there is any basic and fundamental cause for even a small portion of the friction that has developed and that otherwise is unexplainable.

In the first place, it must be recognized that the fact that the Y. M. C. A. has achieved so much success with young men in civic life does not conclusively establish that it can be equally successful with even those same young men when in the service. The Y. M. C. A. has in effect admitted the truth of this statement by changing and modifying its ordinary methods in an endeavor adequately to meet the needs of the men in the trenches. And it must be noted that its present methods, when carried out by its best type of workers, do meet the needs of the soldiers admirably, even if not perfectly; so admirably, in fact, that one is almost inclined to set down as hypercritical all complaints whatever from the soldiers. If, then, the personnel of the organization is, as it has been at many huts at the front, not fairly open to criticism, any friction at those points must be attributable to some deeper and more subtle reason, to some fundamental disagreement or antagonism between even the most able and tactful Y. M. C. A. man and the typical average enlisted man; which disagreement, although probably not realized or ever put into words by either, nevertheless defines the attitude of each toward the other and interposes a subtle barrier between the two, even if neither be conscious of its existence.

In brief, is not the average soldier's creed, or religion, or theology, whatever it may be termed, directly and irrevocably at variance with that of the Y. M. C. A. worker, and is not this fact, however much it has been ignored, the basic cause of much, if not all, of the otherwise unexplained friction between the two?

THE SOLDIER'S CREED.

This leads to the inquiry as to just what is the creed of the average fighting man, of the soldier in the trenches, and whether he has as a fighter any religious views as distinct from those of the civilian of a similar station in life. Upon this question the evidence is so conflicting that it must be subjected to close scrutiny if one is to get at the real facts. There have been numberless accounts recently published of the religious belief of the soldier, numberless accounts of what the individual soldier thinks and believes in the presence of an ever-impending violent death. To form a true composite view of the religious belief of millions of fighting men might seem a hopeless task, but there is much evidence to the effect that however much such beliefs may vary in detail and in complexity they almost invariably will be found to possess, upon analysis, one common factor, and that is the belief that the soldier who dies fighting for his country or for his King has nothing to fear after death. And all but professed athiests and agnostics would put this belief in a positive form—that the soldier will after death have his full share of the joys of the hereafter.

Apparently few beliefs are of a more primitive origin or are more widely prevalent. From the days of the mediaeval Mohommedan warrior, who believed that his death in battle assured him immediate entrance into a paradise of very material pleasures, it is but a short step, theologically speaking, to the typical so-called non-religious soldier of the present day who is slow to talk about his religious beliefs and may even claim not to have any, but who if cornered will almost invariably express a firm conviction that in the next world God will not be too hard on a soldier who has died in the performance of his duty. And what essential difference is there between the two beliefs mentioned, although separated by many centuries of time, even if the modern belief is stated in less positive terms and does not possess the crude details of the ancient faith. Consequently the fact that the modern soldier's creed, as reduced to its simplest form, is of such ancient lineage and still persists in our time proves that it somehow meets a very real need in the modern soldier's experience, no matter to how many other religious beliefs he may also subscribe or to what religious organization he may profess allegiance.

But the belief referred to, fundamental as it may be in every soldier's consciousness, seldom or never definitely appears in the formulated creeds or theologies of the present day, and certainly not in those of the so-called evangelical churches. No evangelical theology declares that a man is "saved" in the hereafter merely because he happens to die as a soldier, if he lives and dies without any conscious confession or repentance or declaration of faith upon his part, and if an individual is not "saved" at death he is "lost" according to this same theology. Moreover, the Y. M. C. A., however much it may aim to improve the body and mind of young men, was and is primarily an organization to promote their spiritual life along evangelical lines. Even today no one may be a full active member of the association who is not a member of an evangelical church, the association thus logically excluding from its active membership all members of the Unitarian Church, however much the association has accepted Unitarian money and even has used Unitarian workers in certain of its departments.

THE CONFLICTING CREEDS.

It is thus evident that much of the undefined and otherwise unexplainable friction existing between the soldier and the Y. M. C. A. worker is directly traceable to their different religious views. If the association worker looks upon all unchurched soldiers primarily as material to be "saved," no matter how much he may also try to minister to their wants of body and mind, he will naturally, be he ever so tactful, be more or less insistent upon matters of faith and conduct in which the average soldier takes but little interest. The typical red-blooded fighting man who unconsciously but instinctively subscribes to the soldier's creed mentioned does not worry about the hereafter or the condition of his soul, certain published abstruse introspections by the exceptional soldier to the contrary notwithstanding, and consequently does not take overkindly to much admonition, especially from one who may be relatively safe from the perils of battle. The typical soldier in fact is prone in the last analysis to excuse his faults and vices by his soldier's creed, and consequently, even although living in the constant presence of death, is not easily "converted" or brought to profess the faith of evangelical Christianity as represented by the Y. M. C. A.

If the foregoing is a fair outline of the opposing subconscious tendencies and mental attitudes of both the Y. M. C. A. worker and the soldier, it must be clear that the resulting situation has made large demands upon the native tactfulness of the worker. For although his theology does not give him any hope for the future of the unrepentant and thereby "sinful" soldier who dies "unsaved," he himself may personally hold a somewhat different view, especially after the broadening experience of living with and working among such men as make up the rank and file of our forces abroad. He may possibly recall the familiar quotation: "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friend," and thereby, regardless of the creed of his church, may privately cherish certain hopes for the soldier after death.

But even if he holds fast to the evangelical theology of his organization he soon sees the tactlessness of openly preaching such views to men at the front. Obviously no matter how much he may believe in a hell, whether literal or figurative, in the hereafter for the unconverted soldier, such a doctrine must be well camouflaged if presented at all to men who at the call of their country are cheerfully undergoing a daily hell upon earth and in momentary danger of death itself. So the average association man at the front does little if any "doctrinal" preaching, and in his addresses wisely lays atress upon morality. But friction even arises from this kind of preaching, for many a soldier resents criticism of his morals and falls back on the creed of his kind in full confidence that his supreme sacrifice on the battlefield will atone in the hereafter for every sin committed in his lifetime, that his sufferings in war, and especially his death in action, are an all-sufficient penance. It is accordingly easy to see that his doctrine of the warrior superman who can do no wrong that will outweigh his total credit balance in the world to come sometimes renders him none too amenable to the moral exhortations of the Y. M. C. A. worker.

"Inter armes silent leges." Similarly upon the battlefield many current theologies seem strangely inappropriate to the real facts of human life as there seen, raw and primitive, and with much of the veneer of civilization ploughed off. In war the carefully formulated beliefs of religious organizations often reveal their inadquacy, and we then see, coming to the fore and crowding such beliefs into the background, certain other beliefs almost forgotten, such as the ages-old warrior faith, scarcely remembered in peace times, but always springing into life at the sound of battle.

In view, then, of the psychology both of the average soldier in the trenches and of the Y. M. C. A. worker of even the best type, is it any wonder that the two have not always really understood each other and that friction has resulted? Is it not rather true that some friction must have resulted and that more did not result is a high tribute both to the Y. M. C. A. worker and his organization, and also to the soldier himself? For whatever may be the future of present-day evangelical creeds through the processes of evolution, it seems reasonable to predict that the ancient soldier-creed will persist, and must always be reckoned with as a force in man life until war itself shall cease to be.

UNAPPRECIATED WORDS

The drift of an exceedingly forceful figure of speech into inaneness is one of the tragedies of language. It goes on continuously and results in stuffing every one's mouth with words the meaning of which he may dimly sense, but the richness of which is far beyond him. Some good can be accomplished by thinking occasionally of the real meaning of words and phrases in common use. The most bromidic of the "bromides" is apt to take on glamour when it is once examined carefully.

Consider the word "skinflint." The average user of it conveys with vigor the general idea, but he neither conveys nor himself apprehends the exceeding expressiveness of the figure. He does not commonly realize it as a figure.

In every one's fund of language there are scores, hundreds, of such unappreciated commonplaces. How many people speak of something as "a flash in the pan" with no mental picture of what the words mean? We "take time by the forelock" and "the bull by the horns." We demand or make "leeway," or "put on full sail"; we "launch" plans; we advise our friend to "shorten sail," or say he is "close reefed," or accompany him to "tide water"; we remark significantly that he was "half seas over." We congratulate ourselves on "a close shave."

Very often, as the word goes, we get "down to hard pan," or perhaps "to bedrock." It is common with us to "get down to brass tacks," but most uncommon to know what it means to do that.

One could continue citing maltreated (because not understood) words and phrases indefinitely. The few given are enough. Phrases become more quickly hackneyed and inexpressive, despite their intrinsic virtue. Words with a fine pictorial character never wholly lose their power and charm. Yet it is there only for those that will take the trouble to understand.—Des Moines Register.

RECONSTRUCTION IN GREAT BRITAIN

Sir H. Babington Smith Discusses Financial and Commercial Aspects of After-the-War Problems Facing the Nation

The following address was delivered recently at Baltimore by Sir H. Babington Smith, K. C. B., assistant Commissioner for Great Britain in the United States:

THE word Reconstruction has a wide application. Not only must the destructive processes of the last four years be reversed, but it is hardly too much to say that the whole framework of civilization is in need of reconstruction after the war. The word is used in several different senses which it will be convenient to distinguish.

Reconstruction, in its most limited sense, applies to the reparation of actual damage done by the war. This includes the rebuilding of houses, villages, and towns which have been destroyed; the replacement of industrial plants and machinery which have been destroyed or carried off; the restoration of mines, railways, canals, roads, woods, orchards, and so forth, and of the surface of the soil itself.

This problem is a large and urgent one, but its primary interest is for those nations on whose territory the land war has been waged. Except in one particular, with which I shall deal immediately, Great Britain is interested, not directly, as having suffered such damage, except in a minor degree; but indirectly, in seeing that all possible measures are taken to ensure that those allied countries which have been devastated shall be restored as completely and rapidly as possible, and in contributing, in such ways as may be possible, to the supply of materials or transport for that purpose.

It is on shipping especially that Great Britain has suffered losses, owing to the operation of German submarines without any restriction of law or humanity. The British losses of mercantile shipping from the beginning of the war up to Oct. 31, 1918, from enemy action and marine risk amounted to 9,032,000 gross tons. The additions to British mercantile tonnage in the same period from new construction, from tonnage purchased abroad, and from enemy tonnage captured, amounted to 5,589,000 gross tons, leaving a net reduction in British tonnage of 3,443,000 tons, mainly due to hostile action.

The world's losses, excluding enemy countries, amounted to just over 15,000,000 tons. The new construction was 10,849,000 tons, and the enemy tonnage captured 2,393,000 tons, making together 13,242,000 tons, and leaving a net reduction of 1,811,000 tons. It will be seen that while British tonnage has lost 3,443,000 tons, the rest of the non-enemy world has actually gained on balance 1,632,000 tons.

There will undoubtedly be a claim upon all existing enemy tonnage to make good the marine losses of the Allies from illegal enemy action; but as the total German tonnage before the war was under 5,000,000 gross tons, and the tonnage possessed by other enemy countries was very much less than that, and as a considerable part of this has already been captured or requisitioned by the Allies or America, it is obvious that only a part of the losses can be made good in this way.

British mercantile shipbuilding during the war has been heavily handicapped by the demands of naval shipbuilding, by the withdrawal of labor for military service, and by the great amount of repair work that was required both for the British and American navies and the merchant marine. Out of 381,000 men who were engaged shortly before the end of the war in shipbuilding, in marine engineering and in repairs, only 116,000, or considerably less than one-third, were engaged in new merchant-ship work.

SHIP PRODUCTION.

A considerable amount of repair and refitting will still be required after the war, but with the return of the men from the army, and with the cessation of the urgent needs for naval shipbuilding, it may be anticipated that the output of new ships will be rapidly increased. The tonnage completed in the year ending Oct. 31, 1918, was 1,600,000 gross tons, and it is anticipated that, when peace conditions are re-established, the annual output from British yards may reach 3,000,000 tons. It will, however, take some time before this rate is attained. Apart from any contribution from German shipping, it will probably be at least eighteen months, perhaps longer, before the destruction of war is made good; and it will, of course, be considerably longer before the normal increase which would have taken place in the last four and a half years, and the normal replacement of wornout ships, will have been overtaken. During that time the output of American yards, and of the yards of other countries will continue at a rapid rate; and, unless large and long views are taken and suitable measures concerted, it is probable that in three or four years' time the world's shipping will be largely in excess of the world's needs, with disastrous results for shipowners and shipbuilders.

In its second meaning, the word reconstruction comprises the whole process of turning over from war to peace; the process, in fact, of demobilization in its widest sense—military, naval, industrial, and financial.

Military and naval demobilization can only be carried out partially while we are awaiting the final conclusion of peace. During the period of the armistice and Peace Conference armies and, to some extent, navies must remain upon a war footing; and, even after the final signature and ratification of the peace treaty, or treaties, it is possible that considerable forces may be required for the occupation of territories, pending the execution of the conditions of peace, and for purposes of international police.

Careful study has been given in Great Britain to the problems of demobilization. During the present period of partial demobilization steps are being taken to release as many as possible of the men whose services are required in preparation for the general demobilization. Such men are, in the first place, those described as demobilizers—that is to say, men whose services will be required for working the mechanism of demobilization—and secondly, pivotal men, that is, men who are necessary for the re-establishment of industry on a peace basis and for preparing the way for the re-employment and reabsorption of labor.

Arrangements are also being made for regulating the priority of release when the general demobilization starts. This priority will depend upon a number of factors. Men for whom a job is definitely waiting will be released first; priority being given at the same time to those trades—such as mining, shipbuilding, transport, building materials, agricultural machinery, &c.—for which there is a specially urgent demand, since their activity is a condition precedent to the full activity of other industries. Consideration will also be given to the claims of men with the longest service in the army, married men, and men who, on the ground of special hardship, deserve early release. A furlough of twenty-eight days, with pay and ration allowance, will be given to each man on his release.

A comprehensive scheme has also been drawn up for giving special intensive educational training to men, who, owing to the interruption caused by military service, have lost touch with their particular professions and businesses, and measures have been taken for giving vocational training to men who have been maimed, or otherwise incapacitated for their former employment.

The demobilization of civilian workers, who have been employed on munitions work, will take place at an earlier date than the military demobilization, and will require equally careful organization. Arrangements here made to prevent, as far as possible, any immediate general discharge of munitions workers, upon cessation of hostilities, and steps were taken to facilitate, by free transport and other measures, the return of munition workers to civilian employment. This task is aided by the fact that sixty per cent. of the persons employed in munitions industries were at work, for war purposes, upon industries in which they would, in the ordinary circumstances, be working for peace purposes; but a special difficulty arises from the large quantity of female labor which has entered industry, the munitions industry in particular, during the war in order to meet the deficiency of male labor.

EMPLOYING SOLDIERS.

However good the arrangements may be, it is certain that in many cases the individual soldier or civilian may have to pass through a period of unemployment before he is re-absorbed in peace industry. To provide for this, a special unemployment donation will be given for a maximum period of thirteen weeks in the case of the civilian worker, and twenty-six weeks in the case of the soldier. This donation is payable during any period of actual unemployment occuring in the first year after discharge in the case of the soldier, and in the first six months in the case of the civilian, provided that the claimant has endeavored to obtain employment through the Labor Exchanges.

Another process which forms part of demobilization, is the disposal of surplus property. There is a vast quantity of property, both raw materials and finished articles, in use or in reserve for military purposes. The value of such property is probably not less than two and a half billion dollars. In the interest of the tax payer it is necessary to guard against improvident selling; and it is also desirable to avoid the dislocation of trade which would result from too hasty a disposal of this property. It is possible, also that organized schemes for the use of surplus property may be desirable; for instance, that the trucks and other automobiles which are no longer required for military purposes, should be used to set up schemes for rural transport for the benefit of agriculture. A special department in close relationship to the Ministry of Munitions has been set up to deal with this problem, and to dispose of all kinds of surplus property.

I have spoken of the industrial demobilization so far as it affects labor, but there is another side to it also—the question of the utilization of plants which have been created for the manufacture of munitions, or which have been specially modified for that purpose. In some cases the transition is easy. One factory, at least, which on Nov. 11 was engaged on pure munition work, started on commercial work of a totally different kind, on Nov. 12. Textile factories, which have been making cloth for uniforms, or other materials for military use, can readily turn over to peace requirements. If the work has to be different in kind, the transition takes longer to effect. The nature of the changes in contemplation is shown by specimens from reports received by the Ministry of Munitions. Some manufacturers who have been producing aero engines are going to make engines for motor cars, or for small launches. One firm, which has been manufacturing fuses, is turning over to the manufacture of electric fittings, another to motor accessories. In other cases, the change is more radical.

An airplane factory will turn to household furniture and heavy toys. A firm at Newcastle-on-Tyne, which has been making guns, will build locomotives, and will employ 5,000 hands. Several munition firms are taking up the manufacture of hosiery needles and hosiery bearded needles, which in pre-war days were almost entirely imported from Germany. Other munition firms are preparing to make dairy utensils, boot machinery, fountain pens, typewriters, and so forth.

On the whole, the problem is not so difficult as that which had to be faced in the early days of the war. The change from peace production to war production was a change from the known to the unknown. The return to peace again means going back in most cases to the known.

All these industries will require raw materials. The war has made it necessary for the Government to assume control of stocks and supplies of almost all raw materials. It will not be possible to relax this control all at once, and the system of priority permits, and of export and import licenses may have to be continued for a time, in order to secure fairness in distribution, and in order that our obligations to the allied countries may be observed. The object will be to remove restrictions and regulations as soon as it is practicable to do so.

The problem of financial reconstruction may be divided into three branches, which are to some extent mutually interdependent, such as national finance, currency, and exchange.

COST OF WAR.

The total expenditure of the United Kingdom from the beginning of the war to the present time amounts approximately to nine billion pounds, ($45,000,000,000,) of which one-quarter has been raised by revenue and three-quarters by borrowing. Translating, for convenience, sterling into dollars, the national debt at the beginning of the war was $3,500,000,000. It is now more than ten times that amount, $36,000,000,000. Against this, however, must be set various assets. We have advanced to the British Dominions more than $1,000,000,000, to the Allies nearly $7,500,000,000, making a total of $8,500,000,000.

A part, also, of the expenditure is recoverable; for instance, expenditure on food and raw materials which will be sold to the public, and the value of surplus stores, factories, &c. The ultimate value both of the advances and of the other assets is very difficult to estimate, but taking advances and realizable assets together, it is probably not less than $10,000,000,000. This will make the net national liabilities at the end of the war amount to something like $25,000,000,000. If 6 per cent. be allowed on this sum, in order to provide a substantial sinking fund as well as interest, the service of the debt will cost $1,500,000,000 per annum. The pre-war budget amounted to about $850,000,000 a year, and to this must be added a large sum, perhaps $500,000,000, for pensions and other charges arising out of the war, and for necessary increases of expenditure. It may be guessed, therefore, that the annual post-war budget will be not less than $2,750,000,000. There can be no doubt as to the ability of the United Kingdom to meet this charge when its energies are applied to peaceful production; but it will involve heavy taxation, and one of the most difficult problems of reconstruction will be to raise the necessary sum with justice to all portions of the community, and, without placing burdens upon industry and commerce so heavy as to repress enterprise.

The various questions arising in connection with currency and the foreign exchanges during the period of reconstruction have recently been examined by a committee of experienced bankers and business men under the Chairmanship of Lord Cunliffe, the late Governor of the Bank of England.

They consider it imperative that, after the war, the conditions necessary to the maintenance of an effective gold standard should be restored without delay. The first condition is that Government borrowing should cease as soon as possible, and that an adequate sinking fund should be provided out of revenue so that there may be a regular annual reduction of capital liabilities. They recommend that the present currency notes should be gradually withdrawn and that the note issue should, in future, as in the past, be entirely in the hands of the Bank of England, subject to the existing rules of the Bank Charter act; that there should be a fixed fiduciary issue beyond which notes should be issued only in exchange for gold. They recommend that the gold reserves of the country should be held by the Bank of England, and that the amount to be aimed at should be in the first instance £150,000,000.

The committee would rely upon the operation of the Bank of England's discount rate for checking any outflow of gold and for bringing, as in the past, the necessary regulating influence to bear on the foreign exchange.

TRADE AND EXCHANGE RATE.

It must be borne in mind, however, that the maintenance of the foreign exchanges—that is, of our ability to meet payments abroad—depends primarily upon the balance of trade, and that the effect of a high discount rate in attracting floating balances is only a temporary remedy, except in so far as its indirect effects react upon the currents of trade. The position of the United Kingdom in respect of the trade balance has been materially altered for the worse by the war. Securities to a large amount have been sold in America in order to provide funds for purchases of munitions, food and raw materials, with the result that the interest on these securities which contributed to the favorable balance between the United Kingdom and America will no longer be remitted to London.

Loans have been contracted in America and elsewhere, and the interest on these loans will have to be paid. The British mercantile marine has been depleted, and the amount receivable from other countries for freight will be proportionately diminished. It results from these causes that if an adverse balance of trade is to be averted the United Kingdom must either export more, or import less, or both. In order to meet our obligations it will be necessary that every effort should be strained to increase production, both agricultural and industrial, and to diminish all unnecessary consumption.

If Britain is compelled to use every effort to increase to the utmost the industrial and agricultural production of the British Isles, and so render herself independent as far as possible of supplies from abroad, it must be remembered that one main object of this effort is the maintenance of our ability to pay our debts to other countries and, in particular, to America. But the resumption even of normal production, and of the normal export trade from the United Kingdom, must take time; and, in the interval, purchases from the United States to the full amount required can only be made possible by the extension of credits in some form.

In the widest sense, reconstruction includes the solution of questions affecting the future welfare of the world, to which the war has given special urgency and importance. Even to touch upon these would take me too far. International questions of this character form the greater part of the subject matter of the peace negotiations. Perhaps the most vital in the internal sphere is the great group of questions concerning the relations of labor and capital, employer and employed, industry and the State.

Other questions are those of rural development, including such matters as the replanting of forests, small holdings for ex-soldiers and others, housing, education, public health, railways and transportation, electrical supply on a large scale—all these and many others are under discussion as parts of the great reconstruction which will occupy the world not for months only, but for years, perhaps for generations.

MODERNIZED HARDTACK

Warfare today is made "modern" not alone by new and devilishly ingenious engines of destruction and locomotion. There are some up-to-date "added features" that tend to conserve life and lessen the fighting man's hardships and discomforts as well.

Modern sanitary methods and their strict application make practically impossible the ravages of virulent diseases that decimated armies of other times; modern surgery approaches the miraculous in the skill with which it patches, mends, and makes over shattered men who, as a result of such hurts in earlier wars, would have perished outright or been left hopeless and disfigured cripples; and as to the matter of food—well, war is a picnic now in that respect as compared, say, to the civil war.

The Continental troops of Revolutionary days, in Winter camp at Valley Forge, were reduced to dining off their boot tops—when they had any boots. In the civil war large bodies of troops on the march not infrequently depended upon the country through which they were passing for subsistence, and in many instances the sustenance had been carefully removed by the enemy before they arrived. Now army rations are plentiful, always there, and of best quality. Compare, for instance, the "hardtack" of today with that standard and extremely durable food known to the civil war fighter.

Civil war hardtack resembled a slab of concrete more than it did bread. When the hardy fighter of that period undertook to encompass a chunk of it, he first attacked it with the butt of his gun, a heavy stone, or his boot heel, breaking it into small pieces and then soaking it for a more or less protracted interval in coffee, soup, or other liquid that might be available.

The American fighter today has "hardtack" as an important part of his rations, but it has taken on a new character along with a modern name—"hard bread." The big bakeries of the country are turning out tons of hard bread for the boys in France and in training camps here, and as it is made today it is a wholesome, appetizing, and ready-to-serve food.

It is made of all wheat flour and is packed in tins and paper cartons holding a half pound each—a convenient size for the soldier's knapsack and for use in front line trenches, on the march, or in camp. For overseas it is packed in strong wooden cases, holding 100 tins or cartons each.

More than one-third of the enormous baking facilities of one big biscuit company is now being devoted to the manufacture of hard bread for the fighting men overseas. In the last few months eight large factories of the company have produced more than 15,000,000 pounds.

Recently a fleet of trucks loaded with hard bread were hastening to complete delivery to the docks of a shipload of hard bread when the traffic police of New York City stopped the procession and demanded that the drivers show a permit for "putting on a parade."

The ordinary citizen at home cannot buy hard bread at this time, not only because all wheat bread is taboo, but because Uncle Sam needs it all for the fighters.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

COMPETITION

Quality or Price?

It is an unsafe plan to make price the guide in buying a piano.

We do not believe that the question of competition is one of price, but one of quality, character and real service.

Generally speaking, a person buys a piano but once in a lifetime and must depend on the honest representation and fair business dealing of the seller.

The purchaser not being an expert can be misled by an attractive exterior which may hide the poorest inside workmanship.

It is the established reputation of a piano which protects the buyer, and this reputation in the

How an Annual Business of $1,500,000 grew from $50

The fact-story of a five years' accomplishment by a man who is now only 32 years old

DESK ROOM, $10 a month. Apply Room 157 Broadway Building." There it was staring at me from the want columns of my morning paper.

One hour later I had exchanged one-fifth of my cash capital for a place from which to transact business.

For about a year previous to this I'd been a salesman for a small concern. Hadn't been very successful, though, and blamed it on the selling plan of the firm.

I had some selling plans in mind which I was sure would give us the edge on competition. But my concern wouldn't let me use them—insisted on sticking to the old methods.

As time went on without results I began to chafe, because I felt sure that I could have made good had I been allowed to use my ideas.

After one particularly discouraging week I had a heart-to-heart talk with my employer to try to win him over to my way of thinking. But he wouldn't have it—came out flat and told me that he'd have nothing to do with "new fangled notions." That determined me. I decided to put my ideas into operation by "going in for myself." At first the sledding was pretty tough. But the plans I had been unable to get my former employer to use produced results for me.

By the end of the first year my business had grown from desk space to my own office with several assistants. Since then we've pushed ahead rapidly.

I'm mighty proud to say that although there are several hundred firms in our field, you can count on your fingers the concerns who are doing more business than we are, and they had many years head start.

What success I've had I attribute to one thing alone—that I've torn loose from precedent and used ideas new to my line of business.

THE selling plan which built up my business was not original with me by any means. It has been used for years in another field. But it was new to our line of business. Funny thing how people think that an idea which works in one line won't work in a different line.

For a long time we had a lot of trouble with credits. We operated a credit department in the usual way. Cost a lot of money to run it. Then I adapted a credit idea from a concern in a totally different line. It worked as well for us as it did for them, and saved us thousands of dollars each year.

And so it goes. I could give instances like this by the hundreds. But they all tell the same story, and these are enough to show you what I mean.

A man doesn't have to be possessed of extraordinary mental powers to win success, but he does need an open mind and the willingness to use the ideas of others. The credit for my success doesn't belong to me. I must thank a lot of people spread from Seattle to New York—men whose ideas I've adapted to my business.

AT first I traveled around a lot and picked up ideas on the way. But after a while my growing business tied me down and my trips grew less and less frequent.

Soon I felt the loss of the ideas I'd been picking up all over the country. I wondered why some one didn't start an idea-service—I even thought of doing it myself, in fact.

Then one day while glancing through SYSTEM, the Magazine of Business, it dawned on me that here was the very thing I wanted so eagerly.

Trouble was I'd always looked on SYSTEM as so much paper and printing—it had never occurred to me that it contained really practical stuff. But here were the specific experiences of scores of concerns in all lines of business the world over. More live ideas in each issue than I could gather in a year of traveling.

Why hadn't I looked at it in that light before? From now on I'd let SYSTEM do my traveling while I sat at home in an arm chair.

So I started in. Right in the beginning I got an idea for selling one of our lines in a new field. I'd always thought we'd analyzed our market pretty thoroughly, but here was a field I'd missed. We got our salesmen busy by wire. Within a month orders were pouring in by the thousands of dollars from a brand-new source.

Like other growing businesses, we soon got all tangled up with our records. No sooner would we get a system down pat than our business outgrew it. It had always struck me, too, that we had altogether too many people keeping records, but couldn't see how it could be helped. Found an idea in SYSTEM for making record-systems flexible so that they would grow with a business. This helped wonderfully. It solved our problem. Also saved us about $1800 a year.

Two or three times I'd made some costly mistakes in picking employees. I didn't mind the money I paid out so much as the slowing down of the business. I looked upon it all as a gamble anyhow. Then I found an article in SYSTEM about picking winners in employees. We picked our Western Manager by this plan, and he's building our Western business to where it's beginning to push our main office. I shifted some of our present people around—put each in his right niche—and, it's remarkable how this speeded up our organization.

In another issue a Fifth Avenue retailer told how he gets high prices. Does it by "dressing up" an article. One of our lines was a "sticker," we were loaded up with it. We used the "dress-up" idea on it, and it sold and is still selling like hot cakes.

I used to feel cramped for ideas. Now thanks to SYSTEM, I have more ideas than I can use. I work them all out and keep them on tap to use the moment my business is ready for them.

Not only this, but I find that the men in my employ who read SYSTEM are the ones who are the "comers"—it gives them a knowledge of all departments of business instead of confining what they know to the particular work they happen to be doing. And no man can hope to become an executive unless he understands the fundamentals of each branch of business.

There's another angle to it, too. Sticking close to any business grows monotonous after a while. A man needs a little inspiration now and then. I get more real inspiration out of SYSTEM than I've gotten from all the banquets and conventions I've ever attended.

THE way I look at it is that it's my duty to my business to read SYSTEM the moment it comes in. I'd no more think of not reading it than I would of not attending to my business. SYSTEM has helped me so much that I've come to look upon it as a part of my business, and I find that leading business men in nearly every line feel the same way as I do.

I don't care what issue you pick up. In it you'll find a wealth of profit-bringing ideas which you can apply instantly to your own business. No business is so large or so small that it doesn't need the constant stimulus of new ideas, and there is no business man in any line, be it retailing, jobbing or manufacturing, that can't get the ideas he can use from SYSTEM.

WAR WORK ENDED? IT'S JUST BEGUN

Now That the Fire Has Been Put Out, Camp Service Community Faces a Large Task of Rebuilding

By MARGARET WIDDEMER.

SOMETHING more than a year ago there was published in Punch a poem sent from the trenches, which expressed irresistibly the feeling which the world had just then about the war, a war which had by then outworn its welcome, to say the least. It said, in part:

"When the war is over and the Kaiser's out of print,
I'm going to buy some tortoises and watch the beggars sprint;
When the war is over and the sword at last we sheathe,
I'm going to keep a jellyfish and listen to it breathe."

There is no question that the thoughts of the delights of a blessed post-war leisure kept all of us from depression at times. However, when the war actually did come to an end, such a sudden end that it left the world breathless, we found, the most of us, that leisure was the last thing we were going to have. But one or two dreaming souls seem to be afraid that it will appear that not only the population of America, but all the war work agencies, have relaxed their efforts and are metaphorically buying tortoises and happily "watching the beggars sprint."

Under the caption "Let Us Not Forget the Lessons of War," a writer of a daily advice column for women, on the back page of one of the evening papers, assumes that the war is all over; that everything is tidily swept up, and proceeds to tell her readers how, in these blank and unemployed times, they should employ the energies that they have been putting into war work.

It would be excellent advice if it were not based on a mistake. We have helped to fight a big war through, we non-combatants on this side who have given our time and our thoughts and our money to the Red Cross, the "Y.," the K. of C., the War Camp Community Service, the Jewish Welfare, the American Library Association, the Salvation Army, and all the relief societies and war organizations. And now that the stimulus of war necessity is over we feel like letting go. But we can't let go. We aren't through. War camp service isn't ended.

Ended? With the Red Cross Christmas drive, for money needed as never needed before? With the Young Women's Christian Association having to put up new buildings because of the needs of the wives and mothers of returning soldiers to be housed and directed as they converge on the debarkation places to meet the boys who come back? With the Salvation Army and the Jewish Welfare and the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. working like beavers across the water to look after the returning soldiers, and the War Camp Community Service working like quite so many beavers on this side to attend to their problems here? We are just about as much through—and the war organizations are about as much through—as the rebuilders of a burnt house are through because the fire has been put out. "What shall we do," asks the writer of this advice column, "now that War Camp Service is ended? What shall we no now that there are no more song leaders, no more rallies, no more young fellows in uniform?"

There are song leaders, if they are to be used as an instance, young fellows in uniform, more of them flooding the United States at once than were here at once before the war ended. And they need looking after more than ever before, and not only they but all their relatives, including ourselves. Assimilation and reconstruction are beginning, and the Government, grasping the fact of its possession of trained organizations ready at hand is using the war camp service for demobilization and a peace service.

We shall never go back to 1913, though we all vaguely expected to until the war stopped. We are living at the beginning of a new era, something which only happens to the human race every thousand years or so. And these trained organizations are the weapons we have ready to our hand to deal with the new era's problems.

The problem closest in America just now is the problem of the returning soldier. Back of that is the problem interlocked with the soldier, of the adjustment with industry. And back of that is the problem of building up the boys who are to be the young men of the next generation, and the girls who are to marry those boys, and be mothers of yet another generation.

To begin with the returning soldier. When our boys went over they were suddenly dislocated from everything that made civilian life. They were pitchforked into an entirely new set of conditions, stranger to them than to any countrymen but the English. In some ways they were forced into an initiative that civilian life would never have taught them. In another way they had to drop most of the freedom of civil life. To learn to obey exactly what a superior officer said, and at the same time to know precisely what to do to save their lives at a moment's notice, if the moment should come, was a salutary and illuminating experience which will do them good to the ends of their lives. But it was absolutely different from the conditions they left and are returning to. Readjustment must come, and they must be helped through it.

Likewise, in this war our men were held by the Government, with the War Camp Service's aid, to a standard of living and an attitude toward life which they might never have learned out of the army. They cannot be dismissed and forgotten like children let out of school, the minute they touch our shore. They need and desire service more now than they did when they were in the army, and they will for eighteen months to come. And it is not only they who need service.

The Great War was one of the worst things the world ever knew, but out of it may come—have come—some good things; one of those things was the lesson of friendliness. The United States it not going to drop back into its pre-war condition of isolation. It doesn't want to, and it shouldn't. And this is why one of the war camp agencies in particular, the Community Service, has to go on with its work, widened and deepened, not only for the eighteen months that are now judged requisite for the readjustment of the soldier, but as long after that as the community requires or desires leadership in friendship.

The history of Community Service is a shorter one than that of most of the war agencies, but it promises to be one of the most all-embracing and efficient aids to civilization through the years to come. Beginning as the Recreation Association of America—we did not think much of recreation as a necessity in those days—it built up playgrounds and recreation centers wherever it could, mostly for the poor. The rest of us meanwhile stayed each in his own lonely little house or flat, and wished that there could be some way for us to be given a chance at friends and pleasures. But nobody saw a way.

That is, not until the war blazed it. Then the Government asked the Recreation Association to take charge of—well, what it was really asked to take charge of was all the odds and end outside the camps that didn't come under anybody else's jurisdiction. And it did—royally. In fact, it ceased to be a small organization, and at present it embraces most of the population. And where it doesn't, it should. We are, ourselves, the community, and, shown how by community leaders whose function has been very much that of the host at a party, we have learned in the war to make friends not only with the soldiers, but with each other.

As one soldier said, "It gave me my first chance at being friendly with folks." It did more than that. It gave the communities their first chance to be friends with folks, too. It kept the morale and morals, which are a different thing, of the soldiers high before they went over. It gave the camp cities, some of them, their first glimpse of the fact that companionship and brotherliness still existed in this too individualised, too indifferent America of ours. Neither soldier nor community can afford to give these up. The Community Houses erected throughout the country were not temporary structures. They are functioning still, more needed than ever for the year and a half to come while the soldiers are being demobilized; needed after that to keep the community and the soldier from dropping back into the old isolation, with all its ills in its train.

The Community Sing is going on on a bigger scale than before. Song-leading is becoming a recognized profession, and the railroad stations are being utilized for meeting places because the gatherings of singers have overflowed the school houses and other centres where they originally met.

During the past year more than 1,500,000 uniformed men have been entertained by the War Camp Community Service in New York alone. Of these more than 1,000,000 slept in quarters provided by the Community Service, and all of them were entertained and given meals at a price far below cost. Greater than these material comforts is the fact that these men were kept in surroundings where no harm of any kind could come to them.

The Khaki and Blue dances, attended by more than 70,000 soldiers and sailors during 1918, are going on and will for some time to come. The service for officers, especially in the large cities, is being increased; the officers' club in New York, newly started, includes tri-weekly dances and entertainments, thes dansants in the afternoons, a bureau of employment and information, home hospitality service, club rooms and canteens and others are following it in the large cities, because the officers will be coming back steadily for a year and a half yet, like the men.

And after the officers and men have melted again into the civil population the clubs and sings and community houses will go on being used, because people have learned to pull together under organized leadership and find it good.

Community Service has been called on by several departments of the Government to go into the industrial communities and organise friendship there. If we are to weather the storm of Bolshevism, Americanisation must go on swiftly; and the foreign-born citizens who populate the industrial communities must be taught to make friends with each other and with the educated classes. Our democracy, with its insistence on the right of the individual to be let alone and do as he pleases, worked very well in the early days, when the machinery of social life was simple, as it is in all newly settled countries. But in our modern complexities, with our flood of uneducated foreign-born population, come here not so much for freedom of thought as for better chances of making a living, our let-alone theory has led to isolation, an isolation which, pressing hard on Americans of the educated classes, has had still worse results for the Little Italies and Little Hungaries and Little Polands that have been allowed to build themselves wherever industry has called large bodies of foreigners together. The machinery for welding the people of a town has been lacking, badly though it was needed.

The Government hopes that Community Service—the united good-will of the community itself toward friendship—may build again the social life that leads to understanding, to teamwork, to constructive nation building. Community sings, social centres, language classes, community dances, organised physical education for all children, organised civic consciousness, working in the little and the big towns, not so much from a commercial as from a neighborly and friendly ideal; the interpretation of classes to each other, friendship and brotherliness and "mixing," all through this too busy, self-centred America of ours—

That is the program that we have ahead of us. That is the chore we have to do, and it is the war camp agencies, with their intensive, practical training behind them, who are to show us how.

Baded? You remember what John Paul Jones said on a somewhat similar subject—and he was a good American, too—

"Sir! I have not yet begun to fight!"

After Many Days.

The Mexico Ledger reports that Miss Geneva Chriswell, through the Circuit Court, was paid $85 recently for the loss of her graduating wardrobe in 1916. She had her outfit all prepared at that time, when a negro stole it. He was captured, but, thinking to destroy the evidence, he burned the garments. When brought to trial he was sentenced to the penitentiary, but paroled on his promise to pay for the clothes. This he has done at the rate of $5 a month, and has just completed the payments.—Kansas City Times.

An Unhappy Soldier.

One soldier boy just out of hospital bewails his fate in that he went over the top three times without a scratch and then to the hospital from a kick given him by a mule, a bullet scratch in whose leg he was bandaging. At that he was disabled in what was probably the most courageous act of his army career.—Rochester Post Express.

MITCHELL'S REMEDY FOR UNEMPLOYMENT

Readjustment Has No Dangers if Employers and Workers Co-operate with Federal Agency

INDUSTRIAL readjustment can be accomplished without entailing unemployment and suffering if employers and workers throughout the country use and co-operate with the United States Employment Service, according to John Mitchell, head of the New York State Food and Industrial Commissions and former President of the United Mine Workers of America.

In a statement given recently to the United States Employment Service, Mr. Mitchell said in part:

The Government has provided the machinery; it is up to both employers and workingmen to support and use it intelligently. The War Industries Board and the War Department have announced their intention of working hand in hand with the United States Employment Service. They will seek to curtail war industries only so fast as the transfer of workers to peace industries across the bridge provided by the United States Employment Service can be accomplished in an orderly fashion and without suffering.

It would be the greatest pity in the world if, instead of co-operating with these public agencies, the workers on one hand should start a stampede from war to peace work, or the employers on the other hand should consider only their own selfish interests and hire and fire at will. We have got to work together for the common good in this country if we are to get any of the benefits of the great victory. Fortunately, in the organization of the United States Employment Service the war has left us with an agency through which we can work together intelligently.

Men now engaged in war work need not worry that there will be not enough jobs to go around when the time comes, so long as they do not desert their present work in droves before the work of peace is ready for them.

The future of every peace industry looks bright, Mr. Mitchell concluded, and the demand for their products should be enormous.

"Take the building industry for example," he explained: "it is now way behind and probably in for a boom. I would not be surprised if in New York State alone it gave jobs to 100,000 men, both skilled and unskilled, who are now working at other things."

Alkali Makes Soap
Bad For Washing Hair

Many soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali, which is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is just plain mulsified cocoanut oil, for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap. You can get this at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens and takes out dust, dirt and dandruff.

HEALING THE HURTS OF DISABLED MEN

More Than 200,000 Are Under Treatment Here and Overseas—Provision Made for Compensation and Insurance

PRESIDENT WILSON, in a letter to the Federal Board for Vocational Education, has called attention to the fact that the Government stands squarely back of its disabled fighting men. His letter follows:

This nation has no more solemn obligation than healing the hurts of our wounded and restoring our disabled men to civil life and opportunity. The Government recognizes this, and the fulfillment of the obligation is going forward fully and generously. The medical divisions of the War and Navy Departments are rendering all aid that skill and science make possible; the Federal Board for Vocational Education is commanded by law to develop and adapt the remaining capabilities of each man so that he may again take his place in the ranks of our great civilian army. The co-operation and interest of our citizens is essential to this program of duty, justice, and humanity. It is not a charity. It is merely the payment of a draft of honor which the United States of America accepted when it selected these men and took them in their health and strength to fight the battles of the nation. They have fought the good fight; they have kept the faith, and they have won. Now we keep faith with them, and every citizen is indorser on the general obligation.

Under authority and direction of the Congress, complete arrangements for rehabilitation of our disabled men have been made by the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

According to estimates made since the announcement of the total American overseas casualties, there are more than 200,000 disabled men under treatment in the hospitals in this country and overseas. Of this number more than one-fourth have been disabled by disease. Contrary to the general idea of the casualty list, only a very small percentage of the total have suffered disabilities which resulted in the amputation of limbs.

It is not merely the men who have lost arms or legs that the Government is offering to retrain and restore to self-supporting activity, but the Federal Board offers its aid to every man, regardless of his disability, who is entitled to Government compensation. The board realizes that the many thousands of men who are suffering from the effects of shell shock, gassing, shrapnel, and gun shot wounds which weaken their systems, tuberculosis, bronchitis, heart and nervous diseases, all may be unable to re-enter their former occupations. To all these men, as to those with more evident handicaps, the Federal Board is extending opportunity.

Within the next few months several thousand disabled men will be training under jurisdiction of the Federal Board and at the expense of the Government. Those who had been actually placed in training were taking courses in a wide range of trades and professions, including twenty-seven different occupations. Industrial schools, colleges, offices, and shops throughout the country are being utilized so that most of the men are being trained close to their own homes. Thirty-one per cent. of the total now in training are taking commercial courses, 17 per cent. are learning the various phases of agriculture, farm management, poultry raising, dairying, &c. Others are studying law, medicine, banking, and some are being trained in engineering, telegraphy, tailoring, window trimming and designing, accounting, store management, machine-shop practice, meat inspection, and traffic management.

Every soldier or sailor enlisted, inducted, or drafted into the military or naval service of the United States who is suffering from disability not due to his own willful misconduct may be entitled to compensation under the War Insurance act. It is his duty to present his claim for such compensation in order that it may be passed upon by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. He can procure full information by applying to the war risk insurance officer at the camp or cantonment, from whom he may get Bureau of War Risk Insurance Form 526, which he must fill out in order to prove his eligibility for such compensation.

If it is not possible to get in contact with this war risk insurance officer, the soldier or sailor should call upon or write the Bureau of War Risk Insurance at Washington, D. C., stating his case; or he should call on or write the district office of the Federal Board for Vocational Education in which he is located.

If the soldier or sailor is suffering from a disability, he is also eligible for help by the Federal Board for Vocational Education in securing employment, which help will be given him in co-operation with the employment service of the Department of Labor. If he is eligible for compensation under the War Risk Insurance act, he is also entitled to training and placement by the Federal Board for Vocational Education, provided he is not able to follow his old occupation successfully without training or needs to be trained for some new and suitable occupation for which training is feasible.

The Federal Board for Vocational Education will bear the entire cost of the man's training. It will pay for his tuition; it will furnish him with books and other necessary supplies, and it will pay all other expenses that may arise in connection with his training. During the time he is following a course of instruction with the Federal Board he will, if a single man without dependents or a man required by his course of instruction to live apart from his dependents, be paid by the Government at least $65 per month. He may be paid more. If, for example, he received more than $65 per month as pay for his last month of active service, he will receive this same pay during his entire course of training. Furthermore, if his disability is such that his monthly compensation under the War Risk Insurance act is greater than $65, he will, of course, continue to receive this sum, whatever it may be, during his entire course.

A married man and his wife will receive $75 per month from the Government, provided they live together while he is taking a course of instruction. If his course is such that he must live apart from his wife, the Government will pay him $65 per month and his wife $30 per month. The larger his family the larger the amount paid by the Government for its support, whether living together or separately while he is being educated.

The same allowance and allotment will be paid to dependents as was paid to them while the man was in the active service. If he is married, his wife will receive $30 a month. If he has a wife and child they will receive $40 a month, and $10 will be paid for each additional child up to three. If he has a mother dependent upon him she will receive the same amount she received while he was in the service.

In the case of a commissioned officer undergoing training the support paid by the Government will always equal the pay for the last month of active service, an amount always in excess of the minimum guarantee of $65 per month. He will be expected to maintain his dependents out of the amount paid him while undergoing training.

When the disabled soldier has completed his course of training he will receive the compensation prescribed by the War Risk Insurance act so long as his disability continues.

That there is danger of confusing compensation with insurance payments is shown in the cases of some discharged men to whom compensation had been granted for injuries received in line of duty and who have discontinued payments of their insurance premiums. In some instances they have discontinued such premium payments owing to a mistaken belief that the sums they are receiving monthly from the Government were insurance payments.

Only in those cases where the disability from which the man is suffering is total and permanent does the discontinuance of insurance payments by the disabled man who is receiving compensation involve no risk and cause no harm. This is because in cases of total and permanent disability there is a right to recover Government insurance payments as well as compensation, which made further premium payments unnecessary as soon as the disability was in fact total and permanent.

Any man who is receiving what he believes to be insurance payments should carefully verify that the payments he is so receiving are in fact insurance payments rather than compensation payments, and should not cease making insurance payments until he has definitely determined that the payments he is receiving are Government insurance payments rather than compensation payments.

The Red Cross is undertaking to see that every discharged soldier or sailor coming to its attention is fully informed as to his rights to compensation and insurance, and gives assistance in making application for it. When the arrangements for training have been made, the Red Cross is prepared to see that the family receives supplementary assistance or service which may be needed in addition to the provision made by the Government. Since, under the law, the taking of vocational training is entirely optional with the man, and his own will and ambition must first be enlisted in order to insure success, the influence of the family may be a vital factor.

Whether a man receives compensation for disability or not, whether he receives re-education or not, the board is ready to help him get a good job. If he is entitled to compensation and goes into training, when his training is finished the board will undertake to find him a place in his new vocation.

All disabled soldiers, whether in or out of the hospitals, should address their communications to the Federal Board for Vocational Education, Washington, D. C., or to the district office of the Federal board of the district in which he is located. The district officers of the board are located at the following points, respectively:

DEFENDS MEXICAN OIL LEGISLATION

Senor Carpio Says Step Is Not Confiscatory, but Necessary for Revenue, and Pleads for Friendlier Feeling

NO one knows what the rôle of the United States in the war would have been had we already been embroiled in Mexico when Germany attacked our ships and had not the Wilsonian policy of nonintervention prevailed. But that all Mexico is grateful for the stand the President took and has finally justified his faith seems to be evident from the recent turn of events. That is the emphatic belief of one Mexican, who is entitled to act as spokesman for Mexicans, as it was he who addressed President Wilson last June on behalf of twenty Mexican editors accompanying him. Manuel Carpio has been in this country for several months, and is now returning to Mexico to make better known to his countrymen the ideals back of the allied cause. James W. Gerard, former Ambassador to Germany, has spoken of him as an "intellectual giant."

Mr. Carpio pointed out several weeks ago in THE TIMES that the dismissal of von Eckhardt was not merely at the instance of the German Government, but that his position had for some time been made uncomfortable by the pro-ally Government in Mexico. Now he calls attention to the fact, little noticed thus far, that Alberto Pani, a man of culture and modern ideas, as well as a leader in Mexican pro-ally endeavor, is today on his way to France as a representative of the Mexican Government. "Señor Pani was until lately," said Mr. Carpio, "Secretary of Industry and Commerce in the Carranza Cabinet, and was always noted for his strong sympathies toward the allied cause. And this is significant of practically all the officials in the country. Not only have they been sympathetic, but they have stood for and practiced in their own country the ideals of life and Government for which the Allies have been fighting.

"This Government is a Federal republic, with its three branches of the executive, legislative, and judiciary. By no stretch of the imagination can the term 'Bolshevik' be applied to it, for it is in no way organized on the Russian model, nor is the spirit the same. It is because the Mexican situation is as inadequately known in Europe as it is in the United States that we hope, through the action of Señor Pani, that it will be more carefully studied in Europe than it has been heretofore.

"It must be remembered that the Mexican revolution was not headed against capital, but against a political crime which tended to accomplish the transfer of power through assassination. At the same time the revolutionary movement included in its program the amelioration of the miserable living conditions of the workingman. During the strife much blood and much destruction of property occurred, but there was no specific determination on the part of the revolutionary leaders to destroy capital or even to dispossess the old capitalists, junkers, and land owners of their titles to property. The same 'hacendados' which controlled the great bulk of agricultural holdings in the day of Porfirio Diaz now control it, except in places where bandits and lawless bands escape the action of the Government.

"In the midst of the people's depressing poverty lies Mexico's enormous natural wealth. Most of this natural wealth is in the hands of foreign enterprises, which have been exploiting them and, with the aid of Mexican labor, have been obtaining returns nothing less than fabulous.

"Recent Mexican legislation on petroleum and mining has excited considerable comment in the European and American press. The word 'confiscation' has been too often repeated whenever such legislation has been discussed, but it may not be amiss to point out that this question has two sides, of which only one has been presented to the public, that is, the side of the oil and mining interests. The side on which lies the whole interest of the Mexican Nation has been disregarded. It is briefly this: Mexico is not one of the world's powers. It has neither a great system of military organization nor the financial and industrial means to become one either now or in the remote future. Only a thoroughly organized and financially powerful nation could hope to make good a confiscatory measure against such interests as those which exploit the mining, oil, and rubber fields in Mexico. Even if all Mexican officials of the present day were babies or lunatics, they could not fail to see the folly of confiscatory legislation, for the excellent reason that it could not be made good without a mammoth array of power.

"Mexico is utterly deprived of financial resources with which to meet the elementary necessities of public administration. School teachers have been working almost without pay in many Mexican cities, where public schools have increased in number. Municipal administration in the new free City Governments has been in a precarious state since the beginning of the new constitutional national administration. Manufacture and agriculture, the efficiency of which has been greatly impaired by the national upheaval, have not been able to provide sustenance for a large number of workers and have not been a satisfactory source of revenue for the National Treasury.

"On the other hand, the flow of oil out of Mexican territory has taken place in such tremendous quantities that it represents untold wealth, leaving the Mexican Nation practically nothing as the product of that gigantic industry. The plan of nationalizing the Mexican oil fields was resorted to in the new Constitution with a view to raising a reasonable revenue for the benefit of the country, but there has been no intent or action on the part of the republic to 'grab American millions,' as Senator Porter puts it. Mexico believes itself a free country, albeit not a powerful one. If it relinquishes all its rights to modify laws affecting its greatest national resource because of the claims of 'private property' and of 'concessions' to foreign enterprises, then it cannot call itself a nation, but will virtually become the property of these enterprises.

"It is of paramount importance to note that there is really no purpose in the Mexican mind, however backward it may be rated by other minds, to take away from the owners the things that belong to them. There is only the purpose of obtaining from them, through necessary taxation, a proportional, and by no means high, revenue for the benefit of the country.

"The needs of the people in Mexico are appalling. There are no foreign organizations to care for them. Mexico attends to its own needs single-handed. All these things ought to be discussed in the spirit of liberty, considering not only one but the two sides of the question. Señor Pani ought to bring this matter to the attention of the Allies so that an understanding of the real situation may be reached. As a matter of fact, there is no such understanding today and many evils spring therefrom.

"The worst of such evils is the view that the Mexican Nation is antagonistic to the United States and to the Allies. This hurts not only the real 'human' interests of all these nations, but the true concept of the future peace of the world. Mexico is not an enemy, but a friend that expects justice.

"There will no doubt be some means of adjusting differences, if only we can develop the spirit of friendship. Then all troubles, even the biggest ones, will be small. President Wilson, by preaching this spirit of friendship, has become the dominant figure in the whole world. His speeches are radiant with love and a real knowledge of human needs. This man stands like a giant savior before every trouble of the human heart and every conflict of material interests. He has defeated the mighty, but he is greater in his endeavor to protect the weak and to make of all men brothers instead of enemies."

A Salt Lake City Monument.

One of the curious sights pointed out to visitors in Salt Lake City is a $40,000 monument built in honor of seagulls. The memorial serves as a constant reminder of an incident that the Mormons look upon almost as a miracle. When the Mormons first settled in Utah they found themselves in danger of starvation because their first crop was being destroyed by myriads of locusts. Just when it seemed that the Mormons would be left without food the seagulls which nested in countless numbers on the islands in Great Salt Lake flew shoreward as if in response to an order, descended upon the fields and devoured every locust in sight. Their task finished, the gulls returned to their islands, but the Mormons have never ceased to be grateful.—People's Home Journal.

Worse Than Fire.

Insects cause the destruction of more timber that would otherwise be available for building purposes than do forest fires, according to investigations made by the Bureau of Entomology at Washington.—People's Home Journal.

CASUALTY RECORD OF BELLIGERENTS

Corrected Figures to Last November Compiled by an Officer of the History Section, United States Army

George S. Trevor, formerly a Lieutenant in the History Section of the United States Army, has submitted the accompanying tables with a note in which he says: "In view of the public interest in casualty lists, as evidenced by the great number of more or less official statistics which are being printed daily, I am sending you what I believe to be the most complete and accurate casualty figures which have so far appeared."

CASUALTIES OF THE COMBATANTS.
(Corrected to November, 1918; no record of prisoners included.)

Power.	*Killed and died of wounds.	Wounded.	Total Casualties.
Germany	2,045,000	5,300,000	7,345,000
Russia	1,350 000	2,450,000	4,800,000

France	1,190,000	2,910,000	4,060,000
Britain	658,000	2,000,000	2,658 000

Rumania	52,000	145,000	197,000
Greece	8,000	20,000	28,000

*Killed include men died of wounds—but not of disease. At least 60 per cent. (maybe 70 per cent.) of the wounded returned to duty in some capacity. The wounded column includes many men hit more than once. Very slight wounds not catalogued. No prisoners are included in these totals. Russia lost tremendously in prisoners, and of course this would increase her total of fighting men put out of action. Most British lists of dead are larger by reason of including deaths from disease. No accurate United States figures may yet be given.

†Belgian losses are inaccurate—positive information on them not obtained.

VERSES BY KILMER FOR THE OLD 69TH

Former Times Man Wrote Them for Show Which the Regiment Was Too Busy Fighting to Give

Unpublished verses by Sergeant Joyce Kilmer, formerly of the staff of THE NEW YORK TIMES SUNDAY MAGAZINE, written for the entertainment of his comcompanions in arms, have just reached this country. They were written as a medley, to be sung to several familiar military airs, at a show the men of the old 69th intended to give but had to abandon in the pressure of the more pressing work of fighting Germans. Lieutenant Richard Larned of the regiment sent them to a friend in New York, with a letter saying that Constantin J. Harvey, formerly a minstrel, was to have sung them. Part of the letter follows:

THE poem which I inclose tells its own story and tells it vividly and truly. There was a four-day hike from Grans to Longeau, Haute Marne, from Dec. 26 to 29, 1917, that was hell. Many of the 165th (old 69th) were poorly shod and left tracks of blood in the snow. For two of the four days a blizzard raged. Travel could not have been more difficult. At the rest periods men would fall in their tracks and have to be lifted to their feet again when the word came to resume the march. The supply wagons and kitchens fell behind in the drifts, and a crust of bread and a cup of coffee might be the fare for an entire day of this sort of hiking.

But the men of the old 69th kept up their spirits marvelously even under such conditions as that. They might have fallen half dead with frozen feet and fingers at the end of the day's hike, but a few hours later, when a fire was going in some billet, they would gather round and sing the old songs. You couldn't daunt that bunch, (God help us that so many of them are no longer with us!) They could make a joy palace of a hay loft and a tour de luxe of a heart-breaking hike with the spirit they showed—the same spirit that a few months later sent them into battle with heads high and hearts aglow, the spirit that stemmed the German tide in Champagne, beat them back across the Ourcq, crushed them in St. Mihiel, and forced their retreat to the gate of Sedan.

And it was men like Joyce Kilmer and Constantin J. Harvey who most particularly embodied this fine fighting spirit of the old 69th. Joyce Kilmer had lived the life of a literary man in New York, and the hikes did not come easy to him. But no matter how hard or long they were, he always finished them. He was game, that boy. I've known him to hike mile on weary mile with blistered feet, hardly able to move, finishing purely on his nerve. If any one offered to carry his rifle or ease his load in another way, Joyce became indignant. He'd stick it to the bitter end if it killed him. And never a complaint from him. One could see how tired he was; one never learned it from the man himself.

What cheer Harvey and his songs brought to Kilmer and the rest of us, Kilmer's poem describes. Harvey is a veteran 69th man. He was with the regiment on the border in the Mexican mess, and everybody knew him there and liked him. In fact, as Colonel Haskell's mounted orderly, he was one of the best-known men in the regiment. He fought in the Spanish war, too, being a member then of a New Jersey regiment.

A fine soldier and a fine fellow is old "Dad" Harvey. He's 50 years old now, but as full of pep as the youngest man in the regiment. There's no finer horseman in the army at present, as he has proved while on detached service with the 83d Infantry Brigade Headquarters and now back again with the 165th. He's done splendid work under heavy fire in this war, and was once wounded—while we were on the Argonne front. He's an old-time minstrel, and was famous as a singer of Irish songs and as a yodler years ago. He lived in Newark, N. J., at that time, I believe. He has a brother who has fought through the war with the British Army. Harvey is all Irish by descent, has lived all his life in America, (he spent many of his early years as a seaman,) and a finer, keener American couldn't be found.

Harvey never had a chance to go far with his education in his youth, but Joyce Kilmer used to call him one of the best educated men he knew—educated, that is, by his own keen powers of observation and assimilation. Two men more different than Joyce and Harvey in the lives they led would not be easy to find. Yet they were the finest of friends and animated always by the same high ideals of Americanism. Princes both.

Harvey is still with us, and his song and his yodling still rejoice us. Kilmer is with us, too, as an inspiration coming from the man who most completely embodied the finest ideals of the fighting 69th and who gave the last full measure of devotion in his fulfillment of those ideals. Kilmer died in the battle of the Ourcq, July 30, 1918.

By the way, Joyce wrote this poem originally as part of a show which was to be given when the regiment was in Lorraine. But we soon became too dog-gone busy to stage any lesser productions than that of hurrying the Hun.

Regards to all our friends. Have had so few letters recently that I'm wondering what's happened to everybody. Good luck. Affectionately, DICK.

The verses written by Kilmer follow:

THE SINGING SOLDIER.

Before we knew Ancerville, the Parroy
Woods, or Rouge Bouquet,
We took a little Winter walk, about a hundred miles;
And when we all were frozen through,
and hungry, sick, lame, and blue,
A man named Harvey used to sing to stimmon back our smiles.

"In the good old Summertime"—
How we yelled that ancient rhyme
Marching through a blizzard with a mountain yet to climb;
The snow was up above our knees, and the wind, it was a crime,
But we made the Vosges re-echo with
"The good old Summertime."

We were a dismal sight to see, the day
we marched to Semilly,
And none of us desired to hike to Dailly-
court again.
But we all said good-bye to care, when
Harvey set "The Old Gray Mare"
A-ringing down the column of five thousand marching men.
We sang that Rabelaisan ballad cheerily,
Nor marching wearily,
Oh, "The Old Gray Mare" it raised
our spirits airily,
When we sang it on the road to
Longeau,
When we sang it on the road to
Longeau,
We forget about the ice and snow,
So old man Harvey made us roar it out again,
Give it with a shout again,
Echoing about again,
And "The Old Gray Mare" it made us
brave and stout again
When we sang it on the road to
Longeau.

When village after village passed and onward through the icy blast
We trudged with feet and hearts that ached along the icy ways,
Then Harvey'd lift his gay old voice,
"The sidewalks of New York" for choice,
Would set us all to dreaming of the happy, bygone days,
Park lights, arc lights, Broadway, and Riverside Drive,
A midsummer evening at Coney,

When you're glad that you're alive,
When we joined in Harvey's chorus
Of "Me and Mamie O'Rourke,"
We forgot our pain and were back with
Jane
On the sidewalks of New York.

Now when the rests seemed years apart and there was woe in every heart,
And everybody felt as if he'd like to shoot his pal,
Why, Harvey'd light a cigarette and say: "Hell, we've a song left yet,"
And put the whole damned regiment to singing "My Old Gal."
We thought of times long ago,
And it made our hearts kindle and glow
To picture the faces we loved and the places
We used to know.
We forget the weight of the pack,
As Harvey's voice called us back,
And his song would remind us of those left behind us,
Who loved us so.
So Slainthe, Harvey, you're the lad that kept our hearts from being sad,
And there's no truer soldier in the Sixty-
ninth, N. Y.
When we march home victorious lift up a carol glorious
To tell the world what regiment it is that's going by.

And no better singing soldier under
Heaven can be seen
Than yourself if you will lead us in
"The Wearin' of the Green,"
With your rifle on your shoulder and your helmet cocked a bit,
And your Yankee independence and your native Irish wit.

Let the Colonel give us "Route Step"
when we're on Fifth Avenue,
Let us rest and take it easy till we sing
a song or two,
And they'll know what all the silver
furls upon our flagstaff mean
When they hear old Harvey lead us in
"The Wearin' of the Green."

SOME TROLLEY OPINIONS.

They Bear on the Present Tendency Toward Municipal Ownership.

When the President of a company controlling trolley companies in St. Louis, Milwaukee, and several other cities proposed to put the American Electric Railway Association on record in favor of municipal ownership, and the resolution introduced was referred to the Executive Committee for further consideration, The Electric Railway Journal began a canvass of leaders in the street railway industry to bring out their sentiment on the subject. Twenty replies have been received and published, the greater part of them being in opposition to the proposal, though a few see no way of escape from public ownership.

One notable point about this symposium is that eight out of the twenty street railway officials declare positively in favor of the service-at-cost plan, while still others hint broadly that the adoption of that plan would be advisable. This plan has been described as meaning that utility service shall be rendered to the public at its cost, including the cost of the necessary capital invested. In other words, it is fair treatment to all parties in interest.

If Tom Johnson were to come to life, with what surprise would he read the declaration of the President of the Kansas City Railways, indorsed by other trolley company heads, that "service at cost, regardless of the form of operation, is our salvation." That was the Johnson doctrine, though not fully worked out in his day, that made the then Mayor of Cleveland a pariah in the estimation of street railway officials. Johnson spent the best years of his life in fighting for that principle, and his plan was denounced as chimerical even after his death.

What a change has come over the street railway world within a short period of time! In addition to the indorsements by trolley officials of the service-at-cost plan, hear what a speaker before the annual meeting of the Empire State Gas and Electric Association has just said. He recalled the war between Johnson and the local traction magnates, and then declared that "its settlement has had and is having a very marked effect upon the future of electric railway as what is known as the Taylor ordinance, under which the Cleveland trolley lines operate on the service-at-cost plan, has been the basis of practically all subsequent cost-of-service plans.

Another suggestive proposal for staving off municipal ownership comes from the Vice President of the San Diego Electric Railway Company, who would put the trolley lines upon an indeterminate franchise basis, have all taxes remitted and other burdens removed, so that "the public would pay less and get more efficient service than under municipal ownership."—Newark News.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS A LOGICAL GROWTH

Renan in France and Lord Salisbury in England Saw Federation as Solution of World Problems

By FREDERIC R. COUDERT.

MANY reasonably intelligent people, both in and out of Congress, assume that the League of Nations idea is rather a counsel of perfection or a millennial hope than the culmination of a process that has been going on in international relations for a century. Such people look upon themselves as "realists" and believe that the President's plan, while well intended, is unworkable and valuable only as an unobtainable ideal about which to discourse.

It is interesting to find that two of the leading figures of the nineteenth century, one pre-eminent for half a century in the world of French literature and learning, the other one of England's master statesmen during more than a generation, were in accord with the view that the only solution is to be found in confederative action among the civilised nations. In 1870, during the Franco-Prussian war, Ernest Renan, whose political writings were of a very high order of ability and in some instances reflected prophetic vision as the events of the last thirty years have shown, said:

> The principle of independent nationalities is not one calculated, as many think, to deliver the human race from the scourge of war; on the contrary I have always feared that the principle of the right of nationalities, substituted for the gentle and paternal symbol of legitimacy, would cause the conflict of nations to degenerate into an extermination of races and drive out of international law those conventional modifications and civilities which were permitted by the little political and dynastic wars of former years. We shall see the end of war only when to the principle of nationality is added that principle which is its corrective—that of a European federation superior to all nationalities; when problems of democracy, the counterpart of the questions of mere politics and diplomacy, will resume their importance.

And again in the same article, he said:

> On the whole, the immense majority of the human race has a horror of war; ideas of kindness, of justice, of goodness will more and more conquer the world. The bellicose spirit no longer lives, except among professional soldiers in the nobility of Northern Germany and in Russia. Democracy does not want and does not understand war. The progress of democracy will be the end of the reign of those men of iron—survivals from another age which our century has witnessed with terror coming out of the bowels of the old Germanic world. Whatever may be the issue of this war, that party will be vanquished in Germany; democracy has numbered its days. I have certain apprehensions regarding some tendencies of democracy, as I have always said with sincerity, but surely if democracy can limit itself to ridding the human race of those who for the satisfaction of their vanities and their hates cause the massacre of millions of men, it will have my full approval and sympathetic gratitude. (Sept. 15, 1870.)

The "Concert of Europe" has often seemed little more than a phrase, and yet the history of Europe since 1815 has indicated an ever-growing tendency toward co-operation among the largen nations in the common interest. The shock which we sustained in August, 1914, when Germany tirew down the gauntlet to civilization and international morality must not be allowed to obscure the fact that practical statesmen in Europe believed in the possibility of an ever-growing international co-operation of the "powers" which was tending to create a European legislature. The late Lord Salisbury was surely no visionary, but a hard headed statesman with little sympathy for impracticable schemes not consistent with human nature, or squaring with the facts of history. Yet, in speaking on the Cretan question in March, 1897, he said:

> I do not take the integrity of the Ottoman Empire for a permanent dogma. It was established by the legislature of Europe; it has been modified by them; no doubt it will be modified again—what is to be done will be done by the consent of all the powers by which the integrity of Turkey was made part of European law. Much was said, not, I think, by the Noble Lord, (Lord Kimberly,) but by those who stood by him in condemnation of the powers of Europe on this occasion. At least it may be said for them that they are representing a continuity of policy and that they are maintaining the law of Europe as it has been laid down by the only authority competent to create law for Europe. They have been defied by a State which owes its very existence to the "Concert of Europe." If it had not been for the Concert of Europe the Hellenic Kingdom would never have been heard of. I feel it is our duty to sustain the federated action of Europe. I think it has suffered by the somewhat absurd name which has been given to it (the "Concert of Europe") and the intense importance of the fact has been buried under the bad jokes to which the word has given rise, but the federated action of Europe, if we can maintain this legislature, is our sole hope of escaping from the constant terror and the calamity of war, the constant pressure of the burden of an armed peace, which weigh down the spirits and darken the prospects of any nation in this part of the world—engagements into which it enters must be respected—they must not be thrown over at the mere will of an outside power.

It is, indeed, an exaggerated idea of the sovereignty of nations—that doctrine which has found its fullest and most sympathetic expression in the German Politico-Legal Philosophy—to assume that such federated action may not be organized and developed for the common good. If the Twentieth Century is to bring any progress into international relations it cannot be upon any other lines.

The President was wise not to commit himself to any detailed plan of an association of nations. The details must be the subject of constant modification as events demonstrate what can and should be done; yet some real attempt at federated action, in which the lead shall be taken by the great powers that waged war against Prussianism, and in which participation shall be refused to no nation whose institutions are not incompatible with liberty and justice, is absolutely vital. In insisting upon immediately realizing this the President is working along the only feasible and practical lines possible. He is carrying out to its culmination a movement which has long been growing in Europe and which, notwithstanding infinite difficulties, attained a certain measure of success throughout the whole course of the nineteenth century. It is not a mere hope derived from the lucubrations of speculative writers or moralists, but the application of a principle which has been applied in practice during the past with results of importance, which has the sanction of leading statesmen, and without which there can be no guaranty of any lasting peace or any sound development of international law.

It is a fortunate circumstance that the English protagonist of the League-of-Nations plan should be the son of Lord Salisbury—the present Lord Robert Cecil, whose sympathetic and effective efforts for closer Anglo-American co-operation make him a peculiarly valuable member of the Peace Conference.

Why Shaw-Walker Prefers The New York Times

New York, Jan. 7, 1919.

A few years ago Shaw-Walker decided to break into the New York field. We were the last of the leading concerns in our line to come here. The field seemed already monopolized. As a result, progress was not very rapid at first.

Experience seemed to indicate to us that filing cabinets could not be sold by newspaper advertising.

But a plan was presented to me for a campaign in The New York Times, featuring our selling argument, "Built Like a Skyscraper." After consideration, we decided to try out the plan.

I entered upon it without expectation of great results. My salesmen also were skeptical.

After the advertising started, we received few inquiries and few customers came to our store. The plan called for a year's advertising, so we stuck to it. Before the end of the year, our salesmen began to report less difficulty getting into offices and more cordial reception.

Then the salesmen began to show more confidence in Shaw-Walker as an institution and in the Shaw-Walker line. Also more confidence in themselves. Now, all of this was a reflection of the respect for Shaw-Walker shown by "prospects."

That was the first result of our Times advertising.

Very shortly it got to be that in every office where we called, "Built Like a Skyscraper" was immediately recognized. And our salesmen could not go anywhere that they were not shown consideration.

That was the second result of our advertising. Yet our advertising was appearing in but one paper.

Then our sales began to jump. There was no let-up in our increases. And today, midway in the fourth year of our almost continuous advertising in The New York Times, we are far ahead of the sales when the advertising began.

This was the third and greatest result from using The Times.

When business men begin to realize that advertising merely to get inquiries is not advertising but gambling; when they see advertising as a means of creating respect for their product and for the men who sell it, then they have learned how really to use advertising.

If any one should ever ask me whether any one newspaper can reach everybody in Greater New York, I would point out to him that everybody seems to have seen the Shaw-Walker "Built Like a Skyscraper" copy. Yet, with the exception of three or four casual insertions, this advertising has never appeared in any newspaper in Greater New York excepting The New York Times.

PAYING FOR DAIRY'S LACK OF EFFICIENCY

An Examination of the Bad Business Methods and Lack of Control Which Caused New York's "Milk Strike".

LACK of co-operation between the producers, dealers, and consumers, lack of efficiency on the part of the producers and dealers, and lack of proper control on the part of the industry as a whole, which includes the consumer in no small measure, were the prevailing causes of the present milk situation, according to Irwin G. Jennings of the Metropolitan Trust Company, an authority on the subject.

"This is not the first time that we have been faced by this milk problem," Mr. Jennings said a day or two ago. "Neither will it be the last time unless something is done to organize the interests engaged in this industry. In the month of September, 1916, the receipt of the daily milk supply of New York City was greatly imperiled. For more than a week the producers under the leadership of their 'association' had been on a strike, demanding increased prices from the New York dealers. Much good milk in the possession of those seeking to deliver it to shipping stations was destroyed by the striking producers. A large part of the milk received during this period was not of a sanitary character. A deadlock was reached. The Mayor of the city intervened and tried to settle the dispute, but he made no progress whatsoever. The dealers were proceeding on the theory that the public would not stand for a rise in price, and their profits were so small that a very slight advance in the cost of milk to them if they were compelled to sell it at the price existing at the time would have driven all of the smaller companies out of business.

The producers were conscious that the price they were receiving from the dealers did not cover the cost of production, and so were determined at all events to see the strike through. Beyond the interest of the Mayor there was no authoritative assertion of the right of the New York public to receive its daily supply. The controversy was finally settled, but the public paid the bill.

"From that time on the price of milk to the consumer was progressively higher until in November, 1917, but little more than a year from the time of the first strike, grade B milk rose from 9 cents to 15 cents, an advance of 66 2-3 per cent.

"In the Fall of 1917 the controversy again arose. Public authorities began to take cognizance of the situation and the District Attorney even threatened to indict the leaders of the producers, who were making what seemed to him exorbitant demands. It was reported that if the District Attorney would carry out his threat against one or more of the members of the Producers' Association the cows would be killed and the milk destroyed. Again the milk supply was imperiled and again the New York public paid the bill.

"Something more than a year has passed. In the meantime the Federal Food Commission, which had adjusted the price between the producer and the distributer during the war, has discontinued its efforts. The policy followed during this time was for the dealers to charge their patrons just as much for their milk as the commission permitted the producers to add to the original price. Thus both the dealers and the farmers got along very nicely at the expense of the consumer. Now, however, the very first month that these two conflicting elements in the industry are left to themselves, a milk strike has resulted from their inability to agree.

"There are three conflicting interests in this strike, the dairymen's league, the milk dealers' pool, and the New York public. The New York Milk Committee has suggested an investigation and so has the Mayor of New York. The Governor has appointed an investigating committee. It would seem, then, that a pressing demand has arisen for an unprejudiced inquiry into the subject.

"The fundamental points in this inquiry are primarily: What are the facts concerning the efficiency of milk production, distribution, and controlled milk supply, and How far should this be controlled by public ownership?

MILK VITAL NECESSITY.

"Greater New York is a city of more than five million people, and growing rapidly. In it there are estimated by the Board of Health to be 130,000 babies under 1 year of age and 126,000 babies under 2 years of age. The health, welfare, and probably the lives of the greater percentage of these babies are dependent upon an uninterrupted, sanitary milk supply. Milk is a vital necessity. There are no satisfactory substitutes for it. The milk supply cannot with impunity be tampered with. To do so may mean death to many human beings. The right of the public to health and life is fundamental.

"A study of the milk industry will show certain inefficiencies throughout the industry that can well be remedied. While recognizing the ability of the New York public to assume the ownership of the milk industry and the moral and legal grounds for the regulation thereof by a State commission, I urge, as the better alternative, the value of co-operation between the conflicting interests of the industry, the continuance of a proper division of labor, the necessity for faith in each other's honesty of purpose, and a proper appreciation by all concerned of the important element of service in producing and distributing clean milk to this city.

"The basis of the whole milk industry is production. It would seem, therefore, that every branch of the industry should take its roots deep in the production processes and organization. It is most essential that production be intelligent, efficient, and sufficient. All other branches of the industry are, in a sense, agents of the producer.

"Now, what is the situation here? The milk supply of New York City is obtained from more than 30,000 farms in six different States and Canada. More than three-fourths of the supply, under natural conditions, however, comes from New York State alone. It can be easily seen that in a production process where there are more than 30,000 bosses, with almost as many different ideals and attitudes toward production, too much primary efficiency in production cannot be expected. But much can be done to make conditions better. The same business principles obtain in the production of milk as in other lines of business. Such fundamentals as centralization of control can only come with association and regulation.

CAUSES OF INEFFICIENCY.

"The principal cause of inefficiency in milk production comes through treating it as a side line with no real interest or enthusiasm in the production of milk as a science or a business, treating the income derived therefrom as pin money, and by manifesting the minimum amount of response to those inspections and regulations that are occasionally imposed on the situation. The second great cause of inefficiency is the failure to use the ordinary business methods. Capacity production, use of accounting methods to show relation between the value of the article produced and its cost, and a constructive purpose governing the production are lacking.

"In the Fall of 1914 I tried an experiment which proved conclusively to me that the dairyman in order to make a success of his business must acquire and use the same methods in carrying on his work that the man in a well-organized industry uses. I was Secretary of one of New York's larger milk companies at the time. In order to study the various breeds and kinds of cows, with which I was entirely unfamiliar, I attended the National Dairy Show at Chicago. After spending some time there I felt that I had not accomplished what I had come for, because the prize cows were of the purest type and the best in their class, whereas the study of the type of cow which would be most profitable to me was the ordinary-grade cow commonly found in the New York territory.

HIT-OR-MISS METHODS.

"I went up to the barns again and found exactly what I wanted. The United States Government was making a public demonstration of the relation which exists between cows and their feed and the amount and value of milk production. It had chosen for this purpose nine common-grade cows of dissimilar types.

"I stayed with this herd of cows during the remainder of the show and assumed all the functions of ownership, watching their feeding, their milking, the preparation of the records. I inquired specifically into the history of the cows and the manner of their acquisition by the Government Superintendent. I found that this herd consisted of some very good cows and of some decidedly unprofitable cows. They were about the same age and freshened at or near the same date. On the basis of fat value some of them did not even pay for their feed, let alone the overhead and other expenses that would have to be accounted for as the basis of farm production cost.

"The cows were to be sold at the close of the show. I was interested in finding out what ability the dairyman showed in gauging the value of a cow without knowing the facts of her production. At least a score of practical farmers, dairy experts and agricultural writers, after careful examination, appraised the cows, but no two of them agreed in their estimates nor correctly adjudged them according to their respective showings in the demonstration. A reasonable conclusion from this experiment would seem to be that the average farmer does not and probably can not know whether a dairy cow will prove to be a profitable milk producer by mere physical inspection and without keeping an actual account of her production as compared with the cost of her maintenance during a sufficient period of time to learn the facts.

"That is exactly what the farmer does not do. His is a hit-or-miss method. There is no gauge of value, of production, or of method. The interest is centred entirely on the marketing of the milk, with no thought as to the elements which enter into its production. In some creameries I visited I found that there was the utmost disparity among them on such points as the relation between quarts per cow and the number of acres used to maintain that cow. The cows of the large and more careful producers gave on the average of 9.03 quarts per cow, with but 6.6 acres used for the maintenance of the cow. Less than one acre of land was required to produce one quart of milk. The cows of the smaller producers gave, on the average, less than three quarts of milk, requiring more than ten acres of land to produce one quart of milk.

"It becomes obvious, therefore, that if the price of milk is determined so as to permit a reasonable profit for the average New York producer, very many producers will make not only a very small profit but suffer an actual loss in their work. And this is true, not because they have not the cows, nor the acres, nor the shipping facilities, but because of a lack of interest on the application of business methods to their dairying.

"For a determination of efficient production of milk it is absolutely necessary to take four things into consideration. First, the size and character of the farm and the relative number of cows upon it; second, the productivity of the separate cows; third, the efficient administration of the farm and the amount of emphasis placed upon dairying as a business; and, fourth, the distance of the farm from the creamery or shipping station.

"In the records shown at the Chicago Dairy Show it was demonstrated that the cost of maintaining the best cow, which gave six times the amount of milk of the poorest cow, was only 28 cents a day, while that of the poorest cow was 21 cents. That is one of the things the farmers do not take into consideration. A cow is a cow, and the breed matters little to them.

"What does this mean to the consumer at large? The reasonably efficient dairyman has a right to a reasonable profit for his milk. The inefficient business man has not. Yet, in fixing a price for milk, it is the latter who says the price offered him by the consumer does not allow a profit. Very true! It probably does not. The fault, however, is entirely on his side. Notwithstanding this, the consumer pays for this lack of business sense.

TRANSPORTATION FAULS.

"Not alone in this is the production end of the milk industry remiss. The transportation of the milk from the farm to the creamery is an expense item of considerable account to the farmer. That, of course, is also included in the price that the consumer must pay for his milk. Again, there is no effort made at efficiency of any sort. A table made up of a number of individual patrons at different creameries in a given territory showed a disparity of relation of exertion of effort and work accomplished that was amazing.

"For instance, farmer of creamery S, who maintains 24 cows, after milking 8 of them employs the use of one man and two horses to carry his output of 13.6 quarts of milk to the creamery, which is two miles distant. Farmer B of another creamery maintains 18 cows, milks 16 of them, also employs one man and two horses to take his output to the creamery, two miles distant. The price the consumer pays is one that will insure a profit for both men. As a matter of fact, both these men are wasting labor. It takes 40 quarts of milk to fill a can. One can is by no means a load for two horses. The inference is clear—conservation of effort through co-operation among the farmers.

"The transportation of milk from the creameries to the city terminals by the railroads has been lately investigated with great care by the Interstate Commerce Commission for the purpose of fixing freight rates, and, although inefficiencies still exist therein, as, for example, in the case of shipping less than carload lots of milk, this matter has practically been settled by the commission. A more interesting field for inquiry is the matter of city retail deliveries.

"The average number of quarts received in New York City for the month of November was 1,627,127. Of this amount, 598,671 quarts were delivered in bottles daily from retail wagons. There was engaged in this service 4,978 retail wagons which showed an average distribution of 121 quarts each.

"These figures may not be a fair indication of the milk carried in other months of the year. However, that was the situation for the month I tested. The capacity load for the average milk wagon is about 432 quarts, although many of the routemen claim that they have delivered with comparative ease between 500 and 600 quarts. It would be very easy to estimate the number of wagons required to make a delivery, each wagon carrying capacity loads, and to fix this as the standard of efficiency for the delivery of milk in New York City.

DISTRICTING NEEDED.

"It has been said by some people that they have counted as much as seventeen different delivery wagons on a single block. Investigation, though indicating that there was never such a number on a block during one day, still showed the astounding fact that there were from four to ten wagons per block making deliveries for the different milk distributing companies. It is obvious that a great number of small companies duplicating each other's territory cannot operate a New York milk delivery efficiently, and that a few large companies would serve the consumer much more economically providing the customer got a portion of the benefit of the savings. Here, then, is where an intelligent supervising public authority could do splendid work by aiding, after a thorough study of the matter, in districting the city in such a way as would be helpful both to the milk companies and to the public.

"In the City of Philadelphia a few years ago milk was selling at 8 cents a quart. Here in New York it was selling at 9 cents. The Philadelphia milk companies in every way showed as high a degree of prosperity as those of the New York companies. The original cost of the milk was found to be about the same. In surveying the Philadelphia delivery system I discovered that most of the larger companies operated in district sections of the city where, outside of a little competition from some of the smaller companies, they were almost in a position to organize the delivery on a good, efficient basis. The result was that their routes were larger than the New York routes, and, even at the lower price of milk to the consumer, an equal or even greater amount of profit was realized per wagon.

THREE METHODS OF CONTROL.

"Greater New York would probably present greater problems in establishing delivery districts than would Philadelphia, but, under the guidance of intelligent and sympathetic authority, much could be done in this way to approximate capacity deliveries. Suggestions have been made from time to time that the problem could be solved by contract deliveries, but these are clearly impracticable while the milk companies are privately owned, because there could be no way of preserving the individual character of the companies and protecting their individual rights under such a system.

"On the other hand, the greatest argument for municipal ownership lies in the efficiency which could be introduced into city deliveries. If such ownership for delivery purposes could be assumed without incurring responsibilities in other respects, a good organizer could do wonders in introducing an efficient scheme of deliveries. But public ownership should be resorted to only as a a last resort, when every other means of intelligent co-operation between the public and the distributers has failed.

"There are essentially three methods of settling the matter of proper control of the milk situation. The one mentioned above is the last one. The two others are, first, the promotion of natural co-operation between the producer, distributer, and controlling agent; and, second, public regulation by a State commission.

"Let me take them in their order. What may be considered the results obtainable by the promotion of co-operation between the producers, distributers, and controlling agents in the milk industry by the use of efficient business methods and organization throughout the industry?

"Before the abnormal conditions created by America's entrance into the war, New York City was receiving a first-class milk supply in quantities sufficient for the public demand and at a very reasonable price. There was a minimum of State interference and none of Federal. The milk was under fair control without the aid of politics or law except so far as the police power of the State, delegated to the Board of Health, enabled it to pass and enforce the necessary regulations upon those elements under its jurisdiction. These, however, did not include the producer directly.

CLASH OF INTERESTS.

"Why, then, was it possible to control the production of milk? Because New York was a good market, the best one open to producers. Cash was paid for the milk at least once and sometimes twice a month, and many conveniences, such as cans and shipping stations, were supplied by the dealers. The farmers wanted to sell their milk at the New York dealers' shipping stations. This fact is important. Make the New York market a good one. By that I mean let the farmer be paid for the service demanded of him by the public. By this service I mean the regulations imposed upon him by the Board of Health for the purpose of sanitary working conditions.

"At the beginning the farmers were in no way antagonistic toward these regulations. In time, however, they increased in stringency, and the demands of the health authorities meant an outlay of money on the part of the producer. Concrete floors had to be built, walls whitewashed, and cooling apparatus installed. The price paid to the farmer did not keep pace with the additional cost of production under the new conditions. Premium payments were adopted by many of the dealers. By this is meant that an additional figure was paid to the farmer whose product came up to the health requirements. This, however, did not help matters much, first because the premiums were not properly measured and adapted to the situation, and, second, because the base price was lowered so that the additions to the milk checks did not have the full effect of premium payments.

"That started the first clash between the two interests. There were successive ones about the regulation of prices at different seasons of the year, about differences with Health Department inspectors, about lack of proper business methods. There was no leadership on either side, and without that proper co-operation could not be maintained. This state of affairs has been existing for the last two years.

"The people immediately concerned in the milk production and distribution appreciate the value of co-operation.

"Last year a milk exposition was held in New York City at which the dairymen, the distributers, the Department of Health, the State Department, and the consumers were represented. This show was so great a success that it was voted to make it an annual affair. Therein lies the basis for the hope that the problem may be effectively settled without outside interference.

"However, there is the danger that the controlling factors in the industry may not come to a definite course of agreement. Some agency outside the industry may be necessary to furnish the proper initiative. An agency empowered to perform this function would have to be clothed with sufficient authority and gauged along lines broad enough to have the prestige and to command the respect of those engaged in or dependent upon the industry. Such an agency must needs have the power to compel, as well as the ability to initiate, and it must derive its power directly or indirectly from that source which is charged with the duty of protecting the people in their rights, health, and welfare, even to the extent of regulating the business affairs of the private interests which serve them. This source of power is the State itself, and the power it has to delegate to a properly constructed agency organized for the purpose of protecting the people of this city is the police power of the State.

"Such a commission might be composed of from three to seven members, there being represented upon it the producer, the distributer, the consumer, the State, and the city. These men should be thoroughly practical and progressive, and, above all, should be representative, of their several interests, on a co-operative basis. Their functions should be investigatory, supervisory, educational, and compulsory. It should make a thorough inquiry into the methods of production, their efficiency and purpose. This would involve not only matters of quality but also of quantity, of the cost of labor, cows, feed, ice, country distribution and handling, of shipping and the character of profits demanded in the country. At the city end, it should view the organization, conditions, and efficiency of milk delivery, the equipment used, the cost entailed and the final price demanded of the consumer, with the nature and amount of the profit involved.

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP.

"It would seem, then, that a properly constituted Milk Commission would be able to exert a most beneficent influence upon the industry. The main difficulties with the practical carrying out of the idea would be of a political nature. It is not only the up-State dairymen who is in conflict with the city dealer. There has for years been a division between the New York City and the up-State voter. Those up-State officers who would probably have the appointing power under the scheme outlined above, would hesitate to take any stand that might be construed as antagonistic to the farmer. While this plan of public regulation by a commission could be so administered as to be a great blessing to the New York State dairyman, it is very likely that he would not see it in that way.

"If politics could be kept out of appointment of the men on the commission and the ideal of service could be brought into its work, a splendid economic contribution might be made by it. If politics did enter their appointment, and work, the commission would be detrimental to the industry and the public. Herein lies the rub.

"This brings us to the municipal ownership of the industry. I support this theory not upon the basis of the socialist whose economic reasoning would justify the public ownership of any industry but upon the grounds usually given and legally maintained, under our present theories of private ownership and so-called capitalistic economy, for the ownership by municipalities of public utilities and public service agencies. Those who are engaged in the various functions of the milk business, either in producing or distributing, are performing a public service. The point is this: Is this service so great as to justify the public to assume its ownership under the law, as it does, for instance, in the case of the municipally owned water-works?

"As I see it, there are three ways in which municipal ownership and control may manifest itself. First, municipal ownership of city delivery equipment, pasteurising plants and milk markets with private ownership of production sources; second, municipal ownership of city delivery equipment, pasteurising plants and milk markets with gradual organization and control of enough of production to demonate the entire output; third, granting monopoly privileges to a private milk company already organized and equipped to give city service and regulating enough of production by law and through police power to assure a sufficient supply.

"Personally, I am not in favor of Government control unless no other way is possible. The function of Government is not business and those engaged in public life do better in adhering to their proper business. Politics is never efficient, and politics would certainly enter the milk business under general public control. Since both production and distribution are distinct functions of the milk industry, each dependent for industrial health on the other with the consumer entitled to efficiency from both, the first great requisite is the co-operation of producer, distributer and consumer. On this will depend the health of the industry. The real interest of the producer is not production alone, but a healthy milk industry throughout. The real interest of the distributer is not distribution alone, but a healthy milk industry throughout.

"The consumers' position is not to support one side or the other, but to insist upon the co-operation of both these interests to the end that the public may be better and constantly served with a healthful milk supply. Just now we cannot boast of that. What the public is going to do to insure that supply for the future, is a question worthy of thought."

PROHIBITION'S EFFECT ON MEALS AND MOVIES

Restaurateurs and Theatre Directors Discuss the Federal Amendment in Relation to Their Business

NOW that the country is to be bone dry, it is of interest to know how the restaurateurs of the metropolis, who have so long purveyed the cup that cheers and also inebriates to the lovers of New York night life, think of the new era which is being ushered in. Several of them were interviewed just before the fateful Federal prohibition amendment was finally ratified, for the purpose of ascertaining their attitude toward the prospect looming up ahead of them. Some were blandly cheerful, others hopelessly dismal.

One of the men interviewed was the proprietor of Churchill's. His attitude was one of cheerful anticipation.

"If it comes, it comes, that's all," he observed. "We'll manage to keep this place going on a dry basis just as we have made a success of it on the present order of things. This is not a drinking place per se. It is a restaurant. People come here for the food and entertainment. The coming in of prohibition won't make any difference in that end of the program.

"As for stopping the drinking end of it, that's unfortunate and not especially pleasant, but we'll fall into line along with the rest of our friends and toe the Government mark. Last month in making a resumé of the type of business we had done we found that 77 per cent. of our patronage was restaurant or food patronage and 23 per cent. just drinks. Of course, the people who come to eat take liquor with their meals, but primarily they come to eat. Take away the drinks and they will come in equal numbers.

NO GREAT HARDSHIP.

"Today Churchill's means a certain form of entertainment to these people. The sociability inspired by drinking may be part of it. But, then, there are numberless other places in the city where that end of it alone could be easily satisfied. Proclaim the city dry and the same people will keep on coming in the same numbers to the same places. Why? Because compared to the other restaurants and cabarets in the city, their favorite place still ranks the same, although on a different plane. It's not a case of some staying wet and others going dry.

"Prices of food will go up. That is to be expected. Another innovation will be the variety and number of soft drinks. New Yorkers will find that they can have just as good a time and spend just as much money on soft drink mixtures as they did on hard drinks. The restaurant manager won't feel it at all.

"Last Fall, when the hotel men met in this city, I broached the question to Mr. Childs of Portland, Ore., who owns one of the best hotels there. His answer was rather startling. He told me of his own experience in his own place. Before the State went dry the receipts of the bar were $125 a day. When the order to close down came along he decided that he'd try the experiment of turning the bar into a soft-drink counter. Instead of the men who used to stand behind it he employed two girls. On the first day the receipts were $140. They kept rising steadily, until today he counts that day lost which doesn't bring in $400. That was in addition to the rise in prices of rooms, which he thought at the beginning would be necessary to make him meet his expenses. So, you see, it won't be a very great hardship."

But Joe of the Black Cat restaurant in Greenwich Village was pessimistic.

"If the country goes dry," he solemnly announced, "I get out. Oh, yes, it is as bad as that. I close up. Look at this place. Bare walls, a few lanterns, an iron stove. Do you think people will come here to see that? Or to talk? Oh, no! You take the drink away from them and they don't come.

"Most of the crowd that comes here is an uptown crowd. They come down to get the atmosphere of the village. Take the wine away from Greenwich Village and where is the village? This part of the city is supposedly a replica of the Latin quarters of Europe. What's a Latin quartier without red wine? Did you ever read of one? Can you imagine one? I can't.

GREENWICH VILLAGE GLOOM.

"When I think of what this place will be like after the law goes into effect it makes me shudder. You would have to be here to understand. There is good talk and humor and good spirits. I don't for a minute flatter myself that it is my presence that does it. It is the wine. The atmosphere doesn't lie in the walls of the place or the smoke in the place. It is the effect of drinking just enough to forget the gloomy things of life. Without that everything here would be flat, stale, and unprofitable.

"What I am saying should not make you believe that I am excusing intoxication. People do not need to drink to the degree of intoxication. They drink here as they do in the foreign countries—as part of the general course of the meal. I am serious when I say that I shall close up. All the places in Greenwich Village will close up. There won't be any Greenwich Village. The people down here aren't the ones who make it popular. It's the people from uptown, and they won't come when they can't get what they have all along been getting here. But I don't believe we shall have to close up. The law won't go into effect. Mr. Wilson will come back from Europe with different ideas about the question. He won't let the country go dry. If he does, I will go where it is wet."

Mr. Raymond Orteig, owner of the Lafayette and Brevoort Hotels, was philosophical about the subject.

"When the country goes dry, why then the only thing we shall do is go dry too. It will make a difference, of course, but not of sufficient seriousness to cause me to worry for a moment about the possibility of going on. Hotel rates will go up, naturally. But then the people won't mind very much. They will be able to afford such an increase due to the fact that they will be saving on beverages. One thing that will greatly affect me will be the fact that I shall not be allowed to use the liquors in some of the dishes which require it. There are a good many foods which need sherry, port, maraschino or even ale in the making of them. Of course, they will have to go and, of course, some of my patrons will mourn, their departure. Those things must be borne with fortitude. Apart from that I think we will soon get accustomed to the new order of things."

Joel of Joel's Restaurant, in West Forty-first Street, was perhaps the most optimistic of all.

"I refer you," he said, "to the wisest answerer of questions in literature, Mr. Jack Bunsby. When a question was propounded to Jack he answered, 'If so he, why not? Can any man say otherwise? 'No. Awast then!' If real prohibition comes I'm for it; if it doesn't, I'm against it; if it comes in spots, I'm in favor of making the spots as small as possible.

"You may be surprised to hear it, but I'm not a prohibitionist on principle; at the same time I've never made any money by butting stone walls.

"I've observed that dope comes in at the door as liquor flies out of the window. While I am against prohibition on principle I'm against dope, which is increasing, according to statistics, to a greater extent.

"That's my position, but you want to know what I am going to do. Well, I'm going to wait and see. If this turns out to be a prohibition law like the one they've got in Maine, why, I'll do like all my brethren in New York: I'll be a Maine prohibitionist and cheer up those who need cheer. If it turns out to be a prohibition law like the one they've got in Wichita, Kan., where, I understand, a glass of beer is regarded in the same light as a burglar's kit, why, I'll be a Wichita prohibitionist and try to make my customers like it. In either case, I don't expect to go to the poor house. I have other interests—my books and music can keep me happy for the rest of my life.

"My place subsists more on wit and good-fellowship than it does on booze, in spite of what you've heard to the contrary; and if I can keep the same crowd there on chile con carne who now demand something livelier, I won't worry.

"As for what I think will happen, that is what I am asking everybody. I don't know. My plans? They're what I've told you. And the rest of the gentlemen now engaged in the business of making life and food palatable are in the same boat as myself, in my opinion, no matter what they say. I've never forgotten what our revered President said about 'watchful waiting'; and, as my model and prototype Jack Bunsby would say, 'the bearings of this observation lies in the application of it.'"

When Prohibition Comes in at the Door —— ?

HOW MOVIE MEN SEE IT.

Prohibition brings joy to the hearts of the movie men. There is no question about it; they declare the closing of the saloons, the elimination of drinks from the attractions of club and restaurant, is going to be a good thing for the motion picture business. We may indeed expect to see more movie theatres springing up about us, and crowds greater than ever thronging to the pictures everywhere. For, as the managers put it, the man who can't get a drink, who is no longer able to pass the time away in the saloon, for whom the prospect of an easygoing evening of conversation and beverages palls with the dictum of unassisted talk—the man, whoever he be, whose habits are changed by the adoption of prohibition—is going to seek amusement of some other kind. And the motion picture theatre, they add, is the only amusement that, alike in cheapness and ubiquity, rivals the saloon.

S. L. Rothapfel, manager of the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres—who is about to enter the producing business, and who speaks therefore from a consideration of both theatre and studio "end"—expresses the feeling of the "movie man" in a hearty welcome to prohibition.

"The motion-picture managers have every reason to look forward most happily to country-wide prohibition," he said. "It is plainly true that wherever other places of entertainment are closed the motion-picture theatre profits; and this is especially the case in the matter of the saloon. There is no question in my mind that prohibition will be a great help to the motion-picture business. As a matter of fact, many people who are in the liquor business at present are getting out of it and going into the movies instead. The liquor business is absolutely dead. And the big future of the motion picture is being made all the bigger by prohibition.

"There are two things to be said about our welcome to prohibition. Of course, in the first place, it will naturally increase our business. But it will also raise the tone of a section of the community which perhaps we might not otherwise wish to include among our audiences.

SALOON'S GREAT FOE.

"As to the good effect it will have on our business, it has been true always that the motion picture has been the great foe of the saloon. This has been particularly noticeable in small towns, where, prior to the inauguration of the movie theatre, there was not much to do for entertainment, and the saloon had things pretty much its own way. With the coming of the motion picture, which offers clean and wholesome amusement to the whole family for the price of a man's evening drinks, many men have been quick to choose the better entertainment, and to take their families along. That being true, the converse is true, too—movie theatre and saloon have been rivals, with the theatre getting the best of it generally; but with the elimination of the saloon, the theatre is left in complete possession of the field. It has been shown already that motion-picture theatres are exceedingly prosperous in prohibition territory.

"It is quite true, I think, that men who would sit around all evening talking and drinking are not going to spend their evenings, when there isn't anything to drink, just in talk. They are going to look for something to do that is entertaining and inexpensive, and they'll turn to the motion-picture theatre.

"It is also true that the mass of men who habitually frequent saloons do not represent the element that we want in the motion-picture theatres, as things are now. But with the closing of the saloons and the substitution of the movies for the drinking-place, it stands to reason that the whole tone of that element is going to improve; they will become the kind of people we want. The motion-picture theatre stands to gain all around.

"You see," he added, "the motion-picture theatre goes to the small town. And I know what the situation in such places is, because I've been in the saloon business in a small town myself."

"We certainly welcome prohibition," was the pronouncement of S. H. Meinhold, manager of the Loew theatres here, when the question was put to him. "There is not a particle of doubt that it will have a big effect on the motion-picture theatres; it should make a lot of difference to our business.

"The motion picture theatre is the only rival to the saloon as a cheap place of entertainment. It is the only place where a man can be amused for a long time at the same price that he pays for drinks—or less. That is what has made the motion-picture theatre the great rival to the saloon everywhere, and that is why, with the closing of the saloons, we look for a great increase in the motion-picture business. Men will seek amusement, and the motion-picture theatre will be the natural place to seek it.

"Of course it stands to reason, too, that the class of people who now frequent the saloons are going to get a lot of education through going to the movies instead. It will improve the community. And I might add, here, what is an interesting point—that the average person who frequents the saloon is an entirely different character when he goes to the theatre."

NEWS OF THE STAGE, ITS PLAYS AND PLAYERS

HAMLET THE PRINCE

By JOHN CORBIN.

THE first thing to be said of the Hamlet of Walter Hampden, and the last, is that it is a creation of inward vigor and inspiration. In the sombre beauty of the mood in which it is conceived, in its intense passional fervor and, most of all, in the flexible ease and rhythmic beauty of the reading of the lines, it commands and sustains comparison with the best. As always happens when the deeper spirit of the character is revealed, it has been instantly recognized at its true value both by the critics and by the public. The present matinées are to be indefinitely continued, and there is every hope that the production will eventually stand by itself as a regular evening bill and become known throughout the country. This, I repeat, is the essential fact with regard to it, the fact which no one who cares for the best in the drama or on our stage would willingly sophisticate or slur. Hamlet is, however, of all parts the most complex and many faceted; and it so happens that in Mr. Hampden's performance one important phase is obscured and, in fact, positively distorted.

Austerely beautiful and nobly impassioned, this Hamlet is without familiar charm. High and pure in its moral fervor, it lacks the mellow tones of human kindness. Keenly intelligent, its wit is harsh and heavy handed. Of humor it has not even, as an analytic chemist might say, "a trace." It is a more kingly figure, if you will, than the hero of Shakespeare, who seems to have lacked the instinct for flowing purple. With Horatio, certainly, and even with Rosencrants and Guildenstern at the start, Hamlet renounces all differences of rank and insists upon the relation of man to man. The strolling Players are his good "friends" always. Yet this hero of Mr. Hampden's seems somehow to trail robes of state—if not the purple of royalty, then certainly the sables of buskined tragedy. It comes almost as a liberty when Horatio says, at his death, "Good night, sweet Prince!"

Hamlet as Light Comedian.

What are we to make of Hamlet's satire of Polonius? Mr. Hampden delivers it from the shoulder, as if with a sledgehammer. But surely this is the airiest chaff and, though spoken as if to the doddering old courtier, is in reality addressed to Hamlet's friends the players—or to his friends the audience! Most actors have delivered much of it, and especially the "buzz, buzz!" as an aside. Of Irving's Hamlet Frederic Wedmore wrote: "Notice the half-indulgent, half-jeering sigh of relief which follows Hamlet's hearing Polonius's praise of the little speech he delivers as an example to the Players. Here and elsewhere Irving suggests to you that, among all great troubles, there is always this nagging little one, of the tedious old fool's presence and commendation. Many things weigh upon Hamlet; one thing worries him—to be praised by Polonius." Only once in the scene does Hamlet directly rebuke Polonius. To his order that the Players be "well bestowed" Polonius replies that he "will use them according to their desart." At this Hamlet rounds on him with an indignation no less Princelike than his courtesy. "Odd's bodikin, man, better! Use every man according to his desart, and who should scape whipping; use them after your own honor and dignity! The less they deserve the more merit is in your bounty." Even here the blow is softened and half humorously turned upon himself; for Hamlet was supposed to be mad, and the fate of madmen was "whipping." One trait more completes the portrait of the genial, humorous, and most graciously dignified Prince. In bidding the Players to follow Polonius he adds: "And look you, mock him not." He has shared with them his humorous impatience at the "little, nagging thing"; but he cannot permit the old courtier to be mocked by any one of whose delicacy and breeding he is not assured.

The scene with his old college friends, Rosencrantz and Guildenstern, requires a similar touch. At first Hamlet is hail fellow with them, laughing, generous, comradely; it is only after he discovers that they are spies of the King that he turns upon them; and even then his touch is shrewdly, airily satirical. In short, he takes refuge from their inquisition in his comedy of assumed madness, turning the tables on them and scoring point after point in a manner that should (and always does when properly rendered) delight the audience immensely. The scene of the recorder is one of the most brilliant passages of comedy in the language. To speak the lines bitterly, as Mr. Hampden does, is, moreover, to falsify the dramatic situation. For Hamlet to betray his inward resentment is to betray his knowledge to these spies that the King has something to fear from him.

A bit of stage business which Mr. Hampden has introduced into the scene of advice to the Players, trivial though it may seem, reveals unmistakably the depths into which his lack of friendly grace and of the sense of comedy has plunged him. While Hamlet is describing the true manner for rendering high emotion, a boy player, whom we are apparently to regard as the Clown, pulls off a noisy, low-comedy wheeze on one of his fellows. Mr. Hampden rounds on him angrily, as if piqued at the lad's lack of attention to what he has been saying, and delivers the lines as to "those that play your Clowns" in the manner of a personal rebuke. The audience, even more than Mr. Hampden's Hamlet, has a right to resent the boy's disturbing by-play; but that offense is as nothing compared to the ineptitude of converting the Prince's friendly and illuminating comments into an ill-tempered tirade.

Of all Shakespeare's tragic characters, as Professor Bradley has pointed out, Hamlet is the only one "who can be called a humorist." Even among the comedy characters, his humor is equaled only by Mercutio, Falstaff, and Rosalind. And in this respect, as in the gentility and sweetness of his inward nature, his temperament was akin to the soul of his creator. More fully than any other character, Hamlet was Shakespeare. Mr. Hampden has given us a very impassioned, noble, even beautiful hero; but in this most essentially Shakespearean nature he has omitted or turned awry all that is most essentially Shakespearean.

Mr. Leiber also missed the manner of Hamlet's wit, the inspiration of his humor; but he gave us a notably sweet and lovable Prince, bathed in a mood of melancholy that was, in its calmer moments, profoundly poetic. Of Booth's Hamlet I have only the memory of salad days when I was green in judgment—and when Booth was old ill, and wearied. But I saw Forbes-Robertson's Hamlet in its second year in London—followed it about, in fact, from stand to stand of what in New York would be the Subway Circuit, at a ruinous expense for hansom cabs. It lacked something of the impassioned vigor of Mr. Hampden's performance, but it rendered the gently satiric wit, the genial humor, and the poetic melancholy of the Prince as perhaps they have never been rendered before.

Shakespeare and the Hamlet Tradition.

What wouldn't one give for an authentic report of the part as it took form and substance under the guiding touch of Shakespeare, playwright and manager! Of Burbage's Hamlet we know little in detail. One elegy, called forth by the actor's death in 1619, assures us of the exceeding charm of his person.

> Of an excellent orator he had all
> In voice and gesture which we > charming call.

We may gather that Burbage's Hamlet ranked in public estimation with his Lear and Othello, and also that what most impressed the contemporary witness was the intensity of passion in his performance. This, at least, seems to be the implication of the following rude lines from another elegy:

> No more young Hamlett, old Hieronymos,
> Kind Lear, the grievèd Moore and more beside
> That lived in him have now for ever dy'de.
> Oft have I seen him leap into a grave
> Suiting ye person (which he seemed to have)
> Of a sad lover, with so true an eye
> That then I would have sworne he meant to die.

Of Burbage's quality in the lighter or comedy side of his art we know even less. In Lear, Othello and Hieronimo it could have had no scope. But one part which we know him to have played, Richard III., has many strokes of sardonic humor; and the fact that Shakespeare wrote Richard, and Hamlet with Burbage in view is strong indication that the actor's art was as versatile as it was intense. In view of the fact that Burbage was the leading actor in the rich and varied repertory of the company at the Globe, we may safely conclude that he was versatile as he was powerful—in all probability one of the very greatest actors of all time. It may, I think, be safely assumed that he made Hamlet not only vigorously impassioned and poetic, but abundantly "charming" and amusing.

It has often been lamented that the true Shakespearean tradition as to the great parts was lost in the two decades from the Rebellion in 1642, to the Restoration in 1660, during which the theatres were closed. With regard to Hamlet there is evidence, not hitherto fully recognized, that this was not the case. And, incomplete though this evidence is, it tends strongly to confirm the idea that to Shakespeare the element of comedy in Hamlet was highly important.

Burbage was succeeded in the part by a rising young actor named Joseph Taylor. Now one Joseph Downes, in his Roscius Anglicanus, (1708,) relates that Taylor was "instructed in the part by Shakespeare." The statement has often been repeated, but without recognition of the authority on which Downes spoke. In The Tattler Steele relates that Downes was bred behind the curtain and had been "bookkeeper" or prompter since the Restoration in 1660. The company in which he served was that of Sir William Davenant. Now Davenant, who was born in 1606, ten years before Shakespeare died, was reputed, in satires still extant, to be the natural son of Shakespeare; and he himself is known to have referred to the imputation rather complacently. From shortly after the date of Shakespeare's death until the closing of the theatres he was a successful playwright and of course familiar with the old theatres and companies. After the Restoration he made haste to organize a company and revive plays of Shakespeare, producing "Hamlet" with the great Betterton as Prince. What is more natural than that he should coach Betterton in the style of Taylor, whose performance he may well have seen only twenty years before, and relate the fact, or the report, that Taylor was coached by Shakespeare? And who was more likely to know that he did so than the prompter of his company, who was necessarily present at every rehearsal? Could any tradition be more direct or more authoritative?

Another bit of evidence, equally well known, has been equally misprized. In 1699 James Wright, a well-known antiquary and lover of the theatre, published "Historia Histrionica," in which the Restoration drama is compared with the Elizabethan. It is in the form of a dialogue between two ostensibly fictitious characters, Trueman, an old fellow who remembers vividly the performances at the Globe and Blackfriars, and Lovewit, a younger man of the Restoration era. Now James Wright's father, Abraham Wright, was born in London in 1611, five years before Shakespeare died, and lived until 1690, nine years before the Historia was published. When an undergraduate at Oxford he acted in college theatricals and wrote plays for them, being an enthusiastic and tireless amateur. Is it conceivable that when at home in London, in the palmy days of the Elizabethan-Jacobean drama, he should not have haunted the theatres? And is it conceivable that in later years, having a son with a similar passion, the two should not often have made comparisons between the old drama and the new? The conclusion seems inevitable that this supposedly fictitious Trueman is the elder Wright and that what he relates has the authority of an uncommonly intelligent and otherwise competent witness. Of Taylor he relates that he performed the part of Hamlet "incomparably well." Shakespeare's choice of Burbage's successor, and his coaching of him, thus appear to have been most successful.

Hamlet "Instructed" by Shakespeare.

As to the date at which Taylor succeeded Burbage, the few facts at our command suggest an amusing conjecture. From 1610 to 1613 the young actor, then in his middle twenties, was a member of various minor companies that seem to have led a more or less intermittent existence. Burbage was approaching 50; and, if those commentators are right who apply to his person the Queen's description of Hamlet, he was "fat and scant of breath"—a very unideal Prince. Now Taylor, even in later years, as we may gather from Massenger's play "The Picture," was romantically handsome. What is more likely than that Shakespeare should have called in the talented youth for occasional performances to take over the part of the "Sweet Prince," which Burbage had so obviously outlived? This much we know, that shortly after Burbage's death Taylor became a regular member of the company, and played such important rôles that he stands always first or second in lists of the actors.

As to the nature of Taylor's performance, Trueman puts us in the way of a most interesting inference. The best way of judging an actor's scope and method, short of an explicit record of his work, is to study the general line of parts for which he was cast. The only other Shakespearean part in which Trueman mentions Taylor is Iago. For the rest, Burbage's great tragic parts went to different actors, Swanston playing Othello. Now, as compared with Othello, Iago is a "light" part, having phases that give scope to the art of the comedian. One Gildon relates, 1694, "I'm assured, from very good hands, that the person that acted Iago was in much esteem of a comedian, which made Shakespeare put several words and expressions into his part, perhaps not so agreeable to his character, to make the audience laugh, who had not yet learned to be serious a whole play." Obviously Gildon is of the dullard school of those who are unable to laugh at—or rather to laugh with—a "serious" character; yet his statement establishes a very important fact, that Shakespeare intended Iago to have a comedy side. That he cast Taylor for both Hamlet and Iago, and denied him the purely tragic parts is a fact of profound significance.

The inference as to Taylor's quality is greatly strengthened when one considers the other parts in which he was celebrated. Three of them were in comedies by Ben Jonson. Mosca, the parasite of "The Old Fox," and Face, the confederate of "The Alchemist," are fatriguing villains of the type of Iago, though, of course, less deeply malignant. Truewit, the fashionable wit and prankster of "The Silent Woman," is akin to Hamlet on his lighter side. In Beaumont and Fletcher, Taylor played the leading comedy part of Mirabel in "The Wild Goose Chase"; but he also played parts that approach Hamlet on his tragic side. Chief among these was Arbaces, hero of "A King and No King," a light and vainglorious yet gentle and generous nature, with a heart the prey of wild and whirling passions, verging upon madness. In short, when judged by the parts in which Taylor became famous, he was primarily a comedian. In emotional parts his style was light rather than heavy, and characterized by an extremely excitable temperament rather than deep, pulsating, and vital passion. Yet his emotional and tragic power was vigorous and distinct. The fact that he played Hamlet "incomparably well" apparently resulted from his ability to fuse alert wit and extravagant action with moments of generous sensibility and tragic suffering.

This conclusion, if warranted, has a very important bearing on certain baffling problems with regard to the interpretation of Hamlet which lie, however, beyond the scope of the present article. For the purpose in hand it is enough to point out that in ignoring the element of extravagant comedy in the part Mr. Hampden runs counter to a tradition that, as we have good reason for believing, carries back in an unbroken line to Shakespeare.

H. B. Warner and Irene Berdoni in "Sleeping Partners," Which Continues to Hold Its Own Against the City's Multitudinous Dramatic Fare.

WHAT NEWS ON THE RIALTO?

THE goal of crowded houses was reached at the George M. Cohan Theatre during the last week, despite the fact that Cohan, up to the middle of the week, had persistently refused to be mentioned in the advertisements as the star of "A Prince There Was." There has been a steady growth in patronage since Cohan entered the cast, and some indication of the way such things move is contained in the fact that the capacity of the theatre was reached about ten days after Cohan entered the cast, despite the fact that he was unadvertised. The value of the play without Cohan is problematical, and he undoubtedly will continue to head the cast for another ten or twelve weeks.

Cohan, by the way, is said to be hard at work upon another comedy, similar in weave to "A Prince There Was." It will probably be completed within a month, from which it may be deduced that it is the intention to produce the play, here or elsewhere, during the present season.

Not the Washington Square Players, but several erstwhile members of that sect, have bound themselves together under the name of the Theatre Guild, and will begin to produce plays about April 1. In the organization are Phillip Moeller, who was the Players' star playwright; Lee Simonson, their scenic artist; Helen Westley, one of their most popular actresses; Lawrence Langner, who wrote "Another Way Out"; Josephine A. Meyer, Ralph Roeder, and Justus Sheffield. Of these, only the last named was not a Washington Squarite, but his previous connection with the Provincetown group admits him readily to the circle. An uptown theatre has been secured, according to the announcement, and two productions, both of long plays, are in preparation.

Five plays have been selected with which to introduce Marjorie Rambeau to the London public, no one of which Miss Rambeau ever has played here. She will play the Jane Cowl rôle in "Common Clay," the part which is now Violet Heming's in "Three Faces East," Pauline Frederick's original part in "Innocent," Mary Ryan's in "The House of Glass," and Irene Fenwick's in "The Song of Songs." Such, at all events, is the present plan, but probably it is subject to alteration in the event that any one of these pieces should give signs of a considerable London success, a contingency which certainly is not unlikely.

The Winter Garden is confronted with something of a dilemma in the continued popularity of Al Jolson, who persists in attracting the multitude in spite of the fact that a new Winter Garden extravaganza, yclept "Monte Cristo, Jr.," is now in rehearsal. Jolson began his Winter Garden run in March of last year, and with the exception of about six weeks he has been playing steadily in New York ever since—first at the Winter Garden, later at the Lyric and the Casino, and then again at the Winter Garden. Despite this fact, however, his box-office receipts are the second largest of any theatre in the city these days, only the Hippodrome figures being larger, and there is no doubt that he could continue to play out the season profitably. What will probably happen is that the Jolson entertainment will be moved to another theatre in a month or so to make room for the newcomer at the Winter Garden. Jolson is one of a small handful of players who have the power to draw the populace by the sheer force of personality, practically regardless of the circumstances and the vehicle. Fred Stone is another—and there the list comes perilously close to ending.

Word from London has it that the perennial "Chu Chin Chow" is well over its thousandth consecutive performance at His Majesty's, being now the ranking attraction of the city in point of longevity. Furthermore, its box-office takings continue to be phenomenal—$16,000 and $17,000 weekly, although in its third year. In this country the piece is exhibiting almost an equal sturdiness. Its road receipts, as a matter of fact, are far in excess of the London figures, due to the fact that it is being played in huge auditoriums. A conservative estimate has it that the production will return a profit of $300,000 to its American managers this season.

Boston has received "The Better 'Ole" with acclaim, and it is now firmly established there, with Edmund Gurney of Shavian fame, as the Ole Bill, and Leon Gordon, late star and author of "Watch Your Neighbor," as Bert, or haply Alf. The Philadelphia company is also ready to try its luck, and will have its première in that town tomorrow night. Maclyn Arbuckle will be the 'ullo artist of this organization.

"Everyman's Castle," a play by William Anthony Maguire, which H. H. Frazee tampered with about a season ago, has been recast by that manager and will shortly be sent upon the road. In the company, on this occasion, are Wilton Lackaye, Robert Edison, (released from the late "Long Dash,") Pauline Lord, and Edna Hibbard, the last named being the ingenuish young woman of last Summer's "Rock-a-Bye Baby."

"The Gentile Wife" vanished from the Vanderbilt Theatre last night and that house will be dark for a week before reopening to receive "A Little Journey," now of the Little. After which, presumably, it will be the Little which will be dark.

Charles Bell's farce—or is it a comedy?—"The Dislocated Honeymoon," seems finally about to be revealed in those parts. At all events, rehearsals have started, among those responding to the call being Phoebe Foster, Harrison Hunter, and Amelia Bingham.

Another farce coming this way bears the title "Sleepless Nights," and is the work of Jack Larrie and Gustav Blum. The Shuberts are doing the producing, and the cast is unusually heavy with names. Among them are Irene Fenwick, Ernest Glendinning, (persistently announced as Ernest Glendenning,) Donald Gallaher, (just as persistently proclaimed as Donald Gallagher,) William Morris, Lucille Watson, and Carlotta Monterey.

Farces are seemingly in popular demand, for Oliver Morosco also is preparing one for metropolitan consumption. This one is called "Please Get Married," and the leading rôle will be played by Ernest Truex, despite the fact that he was lately reported to have gone over to the films exclusively for the period of one year.

NEWS OF ANNA PAVLOWA

A RECENT visit of Anna Pavlowa's manager to New York has resulted in the first authentic news of that popular young dancer which has come to light in more than a year. Pavlowa has been absent from New York since February of 1917, and since then has been touring at the head of a company through South America, with side visits to Panama and Cuba. She is at present in Havana, and expects to visit Mexico, England, and Russia before dancing again in the United States.

Something of the dancer's travels and adventures were set down in her own hand, and the manuscript given, at her request, to THE TIMES. With her company, numbering sixty-four persons, Pavlowa went first to Havana, but immediately after the opening there a revolution put a quietus upon entertainment of all sorts, and accordingly Costa Rica, Panama, and Ecuador were hurriedly booked. Of Guayaquil, Ecuador, Pavlowa writes in her idiomatic English:

"Probably as many others, I had not heard anything about this town, and only when we arrived there I understood how unclever, not to say more, it had been on the part of our impresario to let us come to this place."

But Guayaquil held the company for two weeks, due to the failure to obtain accommodations earlier on an outgoing steamer. The tour of South America proper began in Lima. Here, as well as in Chile and Argentina, the dancer was enthusiastically received, and in several instances received testimonials from the municipalities in the shape of medals and tablets struck off for the occasion. South America has always been generous in its treatment of visiting artists, and it is easy to believe that the tour of Mme. Pavlowa was a triumph.

There followed a long engagement in Buenos Aires, then Caracas, Porto Rico, Brazil, and Buenos Aires again, with many smaller cities as well. Panama was again visited, en route to Havana, and this time the lack of steamer accommodations compelled a visit of twenty-one days, during which the company appeared many times before American soldiers and sailors. There was no theatre (this was in Ancón,) but a huge building on a pier was converted into a playhouse in two days—with a stage, dressing rooms, lighting facilities and all. "The front of the theatre," to quote the dancer, "consisted of branches of palms mingled with the flags of the Allies—an artistic and charming picture!"

Here, before audiences of two to three thousand men, Pavlowa and her company danced. Vessels entering the canal passed the improvised pier theatre at a distance of only fifteen yards—so close that those on board could see the entire show. Performances were then given near Colon under conditions even stranger, for here a huge hangar was converted into a theatre. Aviators, working from a height of 120 feet, constructed the stage.

The company, although sixty-four in number, sailed for Cuba in a steamer which possessed but four cabins, beds being placed on deck to accommodate the remainder. The dancer, as stated, is now in Havana, and after visiting Mexico and London she will go to Russia, where her mother still lives.

ROSE OF THE ROSARY

THE production of "Cappy Ricks" at the Morosco last Monday night added one more to the long list of novels, stories or groups of stories which have been dramatized by Edward E. Rose. Rose, although he has written also an untold number of original plays, mostly of a minor nature, is probably the readiest and most prolific dramatiser (if the word may be coined) among contemporaneous playwrights. For years he was officially attached to Charles Frohman's staff in this capacity, and after a quiescent period of several seasons he is now again coming to the front in his old specialty. "Penrod," made from Booth Tarkington's stories and played here earlier in the season, was his; there is "Cappy Ricks," based upon Peter B. Kyne's stories; "Tish," built around Mary Roberts Rinehart's Letitia Carberry stories, has been written by Rose for May Robson, and his dramatisation of Mrs. Rinehart's "The Amazing Adventure" may yet see the footlights, despite the fact that it is a war play. As for the total number of his dramatic writings, it is literally beyond computation.

Rose's days as an original dramatist were, in the main, the days of his youth, and in them he had perhaps as varied and colorful an experience as falls to the lot of any man. He went from a Canadian farm to Boston in the early eighties to go upon the stage, and for four years he acted for a few dollars a week (never more than twelve) in the Boston Museum Stock Company. Here he wrote a pair of plays which found production in traveling repertory companies, and also had the honor of supporting Richard Mansfield, who came to the theatre as visiting star, in the first production on any stage of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." Still an actor, he came in 1889 to New York, and while playing eight times a week in a melodrama called "My Jack," at the People's Theatre on the Bowery, he acted four afternoons in the original production of "Little Lord Fauntleroy," which was being played at the Madison Square Theatre. In the scant idle hours between these appearances he managed to write a series of boys' stories for a juvenile publication, and a play called "The Westerner" as well.

It was "The Westerner" to which he pinned his hopes. He read it to some sixteen managers, all of whom refused it, but finally found an individual who would back him to the extent of a few hundred dollars, so that a single performance might be given. Rose's actor friends had long known of the play, and had even rehearsed parts of it in Rose's attic bedroom in a Twenty-fourth Street boarding house, so the gathering of a cast was a simple matter. To obtain a theatre, however, was not so easy. Rose, presuming upon his Boston Museum acquaintance with Richard Mansfield, who was then appearing in New York, summoned the courage to call upon that actor in his rooms at the Victoria Hotel, and to ask the use of his theatre for a single afternoon.

Mansfield referred him to his manager, one Hartz, and the latter, after hearing "The Westerner" read—or, rather, acted out by Rose—agreed to let him have the theatre free of charge for an afternoon on condition that Rose bind himself to sell the play to him for a certain sum. Rose refused, and the hunt for a playhouse began again. It was finally decided to rent the Thalia Theatre, on the Bowery, for a single night. It could be obtained for $125. The theatre was hired, and Rose assembled a company which included himself, Frank Hatch, and Stephen Wright. All of the New York managers were invited to the performance, and, to assure himself of a full gallery, Rose, in full make-up, stood on a Bowery corner giving tickets to passing urchins until it was time for the curtain to ascend.

It was a sweltering Saturday night in July, 1889, and the conditions attending the premiere were about as unfavorable as possible. The professional members of the audience, in the first place, had assembled to jeer rather than listen. Also, the owner of the theatre threw the company into pandemonium at the final minute by refusing a certified cheque for $125, and demanding payment in cash before he would permit the curtain to go up. A woman in the audience, a friend of Rose's, finally put up the money, and the performance was given.

The play was instantaneously and emphatically successful, and won over its audience completely before the night was over. Although it never was produced for a run in New York, an actor named Fred Bryton played it for several years on the road, with Rose as a member of the company for the first year. It is still extant, and is occasionally acted in the more remote recesses of the country under the title of "Jim, the Westerner."

The following year Rose went back to the Boston Museum as stage director, and it was then that he made his first dramatization—a piece taken from a Dumas novel and called "Captain Paul." Klaw & Erlanger accepted it upon a single reading, but never produced it. Rose spent the next eight or ten years in Boston and its environs, staging plays in stock, writing plays of his own and producing them, and piloting a repertory company, offering his own plays, through the less-than-minor villages of Maine. In 1893 he opened Boston's Castle Square Theatre, built for him by R. H. Allen and Henry W. Savage, with "Captain Paul," which had reverted to him from Klaw & Erlanger. He wrote several plays a year during this period, and produced them all. Among them was a dramatization of Dickens's "Dombey and Son," and a piece called "Flood Tide at Hell Gate." None of them was designed for anything but stock or repertory presentation, and none of them ever got beyond it. As the director of a traveling "rep" company Rose wrote a new play whenever one was needed, and as promptly staged it. He is one of the most rapid workers among the playwrights, and no play that he ever has written has required more than two or three weeks.

It was while he had his repertory company that Rose wrote to Charles Frohman, asking that manager to pay a visit to New Bedford to see a new play which he had written. Mr. Frohman, although he never had heard of Rose before, accepted, but at the last minute was unable to come and sent an emissary instead. The latter reported unfavorably on the play—a piece called "A Square Deal"—and the meeting between Rose and C. F. was indefinitely postponed.

Back in New York a year later, Rose went in extensively for producing, staging no less than eleven plays in a single year, (1900,) and playing intermittent weeks in vaudeville as well. Then came an opportunity to rewrite "Rupert of Hentzau" for Daniel Frohman, and Rose's major career as a dramatizer was begun. Anthony Hope had made a version of his novel which was unsatisfactory, and Rose, while directing another play, built practically a new piece in a few weeks. It was acted, with considerable success, by James K. Hackett, and its reception caused him to be sent for by C. F.

Mr. Frohman gave him a huge quantity of manuscript, totaling some five plays, but in reality all the same work. It was "David Harum," which Rapley, Hitchcock had endeavored to dramatize from the novel, then at the height of its popularity. Rose read the various versions and reported that he could do nothing with them; an entirely new play would have to be written. C. F. explained that an advance royalty of $2,500 had already been paid on the play, and that he was bound by contract to use Hitchcock's version of the story and to pay him the royalties. Rose, in spite of this discouraging outlook, volunteered to go ahead and write the play, accepting as remuneration whatever C. F. wanted to give him, even though it were nothing. He completed the play in three weeks, and it was produced, with William H. Crane in the title rôle, as the work of R. and M. W. Hitchcock. The name of Rose never figured in it publicly, and the royalties went to the Hitchcocks. For the following two years, however, C. F. paid Rose a salary of $100 weekly in lieu of royalty, and probably would have kept it up indefinitely had Rose not finally called a halt.

Thus launched, Rose made over a French play called "Coriale & Co., Dressmakers," and produced by C. F. He made dramatic versions of "Richard Carvel," "Janice Meredith," "Alice of Old Vincennes," and others lesser known. A little later he drifted back into the popular vein, and wrote a series of the sort of melodramas in which John Mitern was wont to appear in the so-called palmy days. During the life of the late International Circuit, a popular-priced string of houses which flourished a year or two ago, Rose was its playwriting mainstay. For the houses of this circuit he wrote seven plays a year, doing them all, incidentally, during a single Summer. One of his achievements during this period was the writing of a play to fit three sets of scenery, the play for which the scenery was designed having failed. Rose not only wrote the play, but it succeeded.

Last, but not least, Rose also dramatised "The Rosary," making therefrom the sort of play which goes on and on and on—yes, even unto the third and fourth generation.

THE NEW PLAYS

AN armistice has been declared by the producing managers, and only one new play will be offered here during the coming week. Nearly all of the attractions in the long list printed elsewhere on this page are enjoying prosperity, and there are unlikely to be many changes in the theatres in the next few weeks.

THE MARQUIS DE PRIOLA—Tomorrow night at the Liberty Theatre.

Here is Leo Ditrichstein back among us, this time in a play from the French of Henri Lavedan. The play, once a Comédie Française production, is described as "a searching arraignment of an effete aristocracy that is rapidly becoming extinct." Mr. Ditrichstein will be the example of effete aristocracy, and the supporting company will include Brandon Tynan, Orlando Daly, Walter Howe, Jane Grey, Lilly Cahill, and Katherine Emmet.

This play, from the Russian of Dostoievski, was one of the most successful of M. Copeau's productions of last season. M. Copeau, Robert Bogaert, and Jean Sarment will be seen as the three brothers, and the elder Karamazov will be played by Louis Jouvet.

Marjorie Rambeau, reluctant to carry the gospel of "Where Poppies Bloom" into the provinces, will return to "Eyes of Youth" this week for a brief engagement at the Manhattan Opera House. The engagement will begin on Saturday night, and upon its conclusion Miss Rambeau will betake herself to London.

The first performance of the fourteenth century miracle play, "Guibour," took place at the Neighborhood Playhouse last night with Yvette Guilbert in the title rôle. It will be repeated tonight, and again next Friday, Saturday, and Sunday evenings.

The customary two performances of "Hamlet" will be given at the Plymouth this week—Friday afternoon and Saturday morning. Walter Hampden is the Prince in this production.

Tonight's free entertainments for uniformed men will be "Tillie," at Henry Miller's Theatre, and "Keep It to Yourself," at the Thirty-ninth Street.

At the Hippodrome tonight a benefit performance will be given under the auspices of the Auxiliary Corps of the New York Fire Department.

AS TO J. M. BARRIE.

Percy Burton rises to correct the statement made on this page two weeks ago regarding the lapse of time since Sir James Barrie's last visit to these shores. It is not eighteen years since he last came here, but less than four. "I crossed with him on the Mauretania coming over in August or September of 1915," writes Mr. Burton, "when he was accompanied by A. E. W. Mason. Barrie, I think, came over to give lectures or addresses on the war, which it was subsequently considered, I believe, would not be advisable. That was before America entered the war, of course."

TYPES

By James Gibbons Huneker

THE philosopher who compared Time to an ever flowing river, yet permanent, sought to prove that Henri Bergson's pet illusion possessed two dimensions: if at a certain moment a man dipped his feet into the stream and withdrew them and an hour later again dipped them into the same water wouldn't that show Time in two dimensions? It does for the believer in a fourth dimension. Changeless change is the only aspect of the universe that seems stable, and I hasten to add that if this is an Irish bull my forebears are to blame. Your Celt dearly loves a paradox. Do not imagine this is a prelude to an excursion through the tyllit land of metaphysics, there to hunt its fauna or pluck its flora. Time and Space are only capitalized fictions, and their existence is as real as the Brotherhood of Man and other sentimental fudge.

After fifteen years' absence from the critical sheepfold, during which I adventured far afield among other arts, I find things very much as I left them. I detest the implication of the word type, believing that there are no types, only humans, each a microcosm, a law unto himself, and yet a chunk of the eternal whole. The types we encounter when traversing the tiny republic of music are changeless. They were in existence when on a lazy Summer afternoon the first faun blew into two reeds to attract the timid nymphs in the boskage. Perhaps nowadays the rôles are reversed. The nymphs, clothed and in their right mind, make the music to subjugate shrinking males; but the principle remains, no matter the particular sex manifestation. Men may change, mankind never. And the French King who declared that women often vary was not a psychological expert. Women never change. That is at once their comedy and their tragedy. Changeless change. Music, like virtue, is its own reward.

Walk any night through the lobby of the Opera House and if you are an oldtimer you will find familiar types. The same husband of the prima donna buttonholes you and whispers how "rotten" bad is the singing of the lady who sings the same rôles as his wife. The "other woman" has a voice like a rusty hinge. You agree with him, mentally adding "both rotten." Arcades ambo, artistically. You perhaps miss the cry, "book of the op" which filled your ears forty years ago, but he is there, the libretto boy, though not articulate. The mother of the prima donna invariably appears the night her daughter faces the prompter's box and our heart goes out to her. She has borne the major burden of the family troubles. She has grown the tender plant. She has raised the wherewithal to keep it from perishing. If there are hitches she is to blame. And when success is achieved her chief joy is to efface herself. Consuelo, the apple of her eye, has "arrived." Except that he puts his hand in his cash box the father is the fifth wheel, the extra tire, to the chariot of his triumphant offspring. Sometimes he drinks, sometimes he seeks the chorus girl. It is the mother who is the real martyr. Even the much-derided husband of the singer can, as a consolation, meet betimes the newspaper choir at an adjacent lifesaving station.

The wives of tenors are fixed types, allowing for certain temperamental variations. Occasionally they kick over the domestic traces; then follow bickerings, scandal, litigation, which always redound to the greater glory of the gentleman with the dulcet voice. Once more he gets into print. The lobby critic still pursues his victims. He knows it all, from the backstairs gossip "behind the scene" to the forthcoming novelty. If a critic dodges him there is Tom Bull to talk to; Tom who has seen generations come and vanish; long-suffering Tom, who knows more about the operatic business than any one of these amateurs who spout into his patient ear the law and the prophets. But he has his little list. That is his revenge on the ineptitudes he politely listens to, ineptitudes that might be expanded into a volume of recollections making redhot reading. Nevertheless, the nuisance still stalks the corridors and expatiates upon his critical wisdom. One man I recall who was worth while, an apparition from the past, the late Signor De Vivo. We nicknamed him the Ancient Mariner, and his discourse was never dull. To young chaps like Henderson, Aldrich, Finck, Krehbiel, and myself he was a boon; loquacious, bland, interesting. I verily believe he heard Catalani in his youth, certainly Malibran or Pauline Viardot-Garcia. Pauline I saw years ago in Paris, and she was very old and very vigorous. But to have heard her sing in her prime one would needs be a contemporary of Heine, who confessed that whenever she opened her rather large mouth he was tempted to throw a lump of sugar into it, so sensitive was he to beauty.

De Vivo regaled us with the rarest titbits. He wasn't so old by the calendar, but vastly experienced. He has not his counterpart today. The majority of the lobbyists go back only to Tetrazzini. Theodore Stanton no longer takes his stately promenade. I was his private secretary for a period and stood in awe of his gold cigarette case. He was the best-groomed impresario who ever politely bowed an angry prima donna from his office. Maurice Grau bustled along. He never had a moment to spare. If he halted to hear me say "bon soir" in my Pennsylvania French, Max Hirsch would pop up from nowhere and say: "Excuse me. Telephone!" But amiable, charming ever, was Maurice. He told me that he took his turn at crying out "book of the op" when his uncle, Jacob Grau, managed opera at the old Fourteenth Street Theatre. Lionel Mapleson is one of the few members of the old guard still to be seen around the opera; also the last in the business of once famous name. Manager Gatti-Casazza is a man of another kidney. He is not expansive; as he slowly perambulates he is deep in reflection. When he does unburden himself he has something to say. With his hands behind his back, his grave Italian face and dark, earnest eyes, he is unlike any managerial type I have encountered. He suggests a scholar, he has the scholarly stoop, and he is a student well versed, inter alia, in history. Perhaps, as he pursues his way through the chattering mass during an entr'acte, he is pondering the possibilities of the Chicago Opera Company. He should "gebibble"!

Signor Guardi, affectionately known as "Littre Bilil," is the life of the institution. In his bright lexicon there is no such word as "wrong." The opera is all right, toujours. He is a type and individual too. No doubt about that. Interview him, ask an imprudent question, and watch his Irish dander rise. The audience of today is the audience of yesteryear. It never changes. Come what may, it applauds at the wrong moment, and in the matter of unmusical stupidity gives your professional claque cards and spades. Like the prompter's box, the much-abused claque is a convention of opera. Abolish it by all means, but to do the job thoroughly abolish all applause except after the final curtain of each act. That is the surest way to cut the debatable and detestable tangle. Handclapping as a singer emits high note is a survival of savagery. Wagner solved the problem by forbidding such barbaric noises, as he suppressed the disturbing spectacle of a conductor's silhouette waving a baton and the disillusioning view of musicians fiddling and blowing. The sunken orchestra, the "mystic abyss," no more palm-pounding, no ridiculous claque—that is civilized opera. Yet I greatly fear it would hardly be welcomed by our Latin-American citizens. During Seidl's régime, indeed, whenever Wagner was sung we were spared the diabolical infliction.

Musical types at piano, violin, on voice recitals never vary. The amount of acrimony displayed by some amateur critics about their favorites is appalling. Why rage over heathen opinions? Tweedledum and Tweedledee. Black looks have pursued me if I ventured to disagree with some one's conception of Chopin. Again why? It is, after all, only one man's opinion, as Lillian Russell has sagely remarked. The very fact that professional critics disagree is proof positive that their verdicts are sincere. Pages of parallel columns demonstrate the case up to the hilt. Each of us carries a picture of the visible, and invisible, world in our heads. No two pictures are alike, never were, never will be. When I hear Guiomar Novaes play Chopin I am sure I hear her as my neighbor does not. If I fall asleep—incredible idea—she ceases to play, to exist—for me. Why, then, this petty irritation concerning the validity of our judgments? Pouf! The world is still beautiful and prohibition is coming. Sing "John Anderson my Jo, John," and don't worry about the tone-production of incomparable Mary Garden. As for me, if I could change my skin I'd rather be Mary Garden than Mayor of New York.
